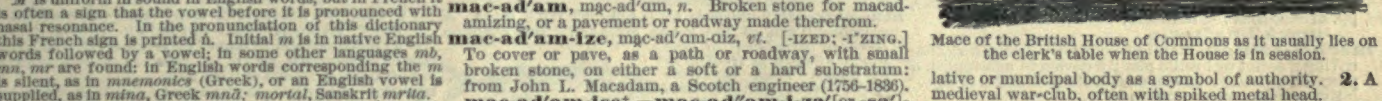
Roman. Black Letter. Script.

M, m, em, n. [EMS, M's, or Ms, emz, pl.] 1. A letter: the thirteenth in the English alphabet; in Bell's "Visible Speech," ꟽ. A sign of vocal resonance in the nose with lip-closure, as in am, or lip-opening, as in ma, sometimes syllabic, as in spas'm, yes'm. It is called a nasal, a labio-nasal, a continuous consonant, a liquid, and sometimes a semi-vowel.



Similar mouth-movements with the nose closed make b, as in ab, ba; or, if the vocal cords are separated, p, as in ap, pa; so that m, especially opening m, readily changes to b or before a surd to p; as limm > limb, num(m)er > number, Thom(m)son > Thompson, consumption; and b or p often changes to m before a nasal (m, n), Latin summus, sum, < root sup-er, somnus < sop-io, sleep. For relations with other labials, see B, F, P, V. M is most closely related to n, the lingual nasal; m before linguals, or final, often changing to n, as Latin eundem < eum, Greek final n < m, as Greek naun = Latin navem, ship; n before labials changing to m, as impress < in + press.

M is uniform in sound in English words, but in French it is often a sign that the vowel before it is pronounced with nasal resonance. In the pronunciation of this dictionary this French sign is printed n̂. Initial m is in native English words followed by a vowel; in some other languages mb, mn, mr are found: in English words corresponding the m is silent, as in mnemonics (Greek), or an English vowel is supplied, as in mina, Greek mnâ; mortal, Sanskrit mṛita.

M is eighth in frequency of the consonants and twelfth of all the single sounds in English, averaging 3.06 per cent. of the sounds on the pages of English literature. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274. [S. '74.]

Capital M is from Lat. Gr. M < Early Greek Μ < Phenician 𐤌 <Egyptian hieratic 𓄡 < hieroglyph 𓅓. The hieroglyph represented an owl. The runic ᛗ = M is called mann, man. It is the twentieth letter of the futhorc. For the lower case, black letter, and dates and the like, see A.

The history of the character is represented as below:

Hieroglyphic Owl. Egyptian Hieratic. Phenician. Early Greek. Roman. English Script.

2. An abbreviation: (1) [m] Meter. (2) [m] Minute. (3) With an apostrophe (M'), Mac. See MAC. (4) [M] In organ-music, manual. ma-chin′er-y, mə-shīn′ər-i, n. 1. The parts of a machine or engine, or a number of machines and kindred appliances, taken collectively; as, the machinery of a watch; the machinery is driven by a turbine wheel.

As machinery is improved and elaborated, its cost tends to put small capitalists out of competition.
CARNEGIE Triumphant Democracy ch. 10, p. 224. [S. '88.]

2. Figuratively, any combination of means working together; a complex system of appliances; the arrangements for effecting a specific end; as, the machinery of government. 3. [Archaic.] The supernatural or other means by which the catastrophe of a classical drama was brought about; hence, the plot and incidents in a work of fiction.

Whatever machinery he employs, he must take care not to overload us with it, not to withdraw human actions and manners too much from view. BLAIR Rhetoric lect. xlii, p. 429. [E. D. '17.]

ma-chin′ist, mə-shīn′ist, n. 1. One who makes or repairs machines, or is versed in their design or construction or in the use of metal-working tools. 2. [Rare.] One who tends a machine. 3. U. S. Navy. An engine-room artificer or helper. 4. [U. S.] A machine politician.

There was a struggle between the thoroughly 'machinist' section of the party and the section less loyal to the machine and more loyal to public morality.
GOLDWIN SMITH in Nineteenth Century Sept., '92, p. 347.

ma-chin′ize, mə-shīn′aiz, vt. [-IZED; -I″ZING.] To organize the powers of; systematize.

mach′i-nule, mak′i-niūl, n. Surv. An instrument for measuring an angle of 90°. [Dim. < L. machina; see MACHINE, n.] ma′cho[1], mā′cho, W. (mē′cō, C.), n. [California.] A mullet (Mugil mexicanus).

ma′cho[2], n. [Sp.] A he mule.

mach′o-pol″yp, mac′o-pol″ip, n. Zooph. A zooid modified to serve a defensive function, as in the nematophore of a cœlenterate.

Hamann explains the contents of the nematophore as a modified polyp, for which he proposes the designation 'machopolyp.' I adopt this view. VON LENDENFELD in Annals and Mag. of Nat. Hist. Oct., '83, p. 250.

[< Gr. machē, fight (< machomai, fight), + POLYP.]

ma-ci′gno, mg-chī′nyō, n. [It.] A grayish-yellow or bluish-gray silicious sandstone from the Upper Eocene of the Italian Alps.

mac′i-lent†, a. Lacking flesh; lean.—mac′i-len-cy†, n.

mac′in-tosh, n. Same as MACKINTOSH.

mack†, n. An old game played with clubs.

mack′er-el, mak′ər-el, vi. To go on a voyage for mackerel; fish for or catch mackerel.

mack′er-el, mak′ər-el, C. I. (-ql, W. Wr.), n. 1. A scombroid fish of the genus Scomber. The common Scomber scombrus of the North Atlantic is from 12 to 18 inches long, steel-blue above barred with blackish, and silvery beneath. Mackerel move in great schools, are carnivorous and predatory, and are among the most important of food-fishes.

The Mackerel (Scomber scombrus). 1/12

2. Any scombroid fish, as the Spanish mackerel (Scomberomorus maculatus) and the spotted mackerel (Scomberomorus guttatus). 3. A fish like or likened to a mackerel; as, the hardtail or yellow mackerel (Caranx chrysos). 4. [Austral.] A carangoid, the scad. [< OF. makerel, < LL. macarellus, < L. macula, spot.] mack′-a-rel‡; mack′er-ell†; mack′rell†.

Compounds, etc.:—mackerel-back sky, same as MACKEREL SKY.—mack′er-el-bait″, n. [Newfoundland.] Jellyfish.—m.-bird, n. [Local, Eng.] The wryneck.—m.-bob, n. A four-pointed fish-jig, for catching mackerel when baited up close to the vessel.—m.-cock, n. [Local, Eng.] The Manx shearwater.—m.-diver, n. A tern.—m.-guide, n. [Local, Eng.] The garfish (Belone belone).—m.-scout†.—m.-gull, n. The razorbill.—m.-latch, n. A clamp for fastening the inner end of a fishing-line.—m.-midge, n. [Prov. Eng.] The young of the rockling, a gadoid fish: formerly regarded as a distinct species.—m.-mint, n. 1. Bot. Spearmint (Mentha viridis). 2. [Eng.] The food of mackerel, mainly small fishes.—m.-pike, n. A saury or scomberesocoid fish.—m.-plow, n. An instrument for creasing the sides of poor mackerel to improve their appearance; a fatting-knife.—m.-rimmer†.—m.-pocket, n. A pouch of netting suspended in the water, for keeping mackerel alive. Called also mackerel-spiller.—m.-scad, n. A carangoid fish (genus Decapterus).—m.-scales, n. pl. Hard, small cirro-cumulus cloudlets, usually slightly angular to the horizon.—m.-scout, n. The mackerel-guide.—m.-shark, n. A porbeagle, especially the West-Indian Isurus dekayi.—m. sky, cirro-cumulus cloud-formation with cloudlets arranged in such a way as to suggest the back-bone and ribs of a fish, or composed of rounded and isolated nubicules without any fleecy texture.

The term 'dappled sky' . . . might refer to the other form of cirro-cumulus known in Northern Europe as 'mackerel-sky.'
R. ABERCROMBY Weather pt. i, ch. 3, p. 106. [A. '87.]

—m.-spiller, n. A mackerel-pocket.

—mack′er-el-er, n. A person or a boat engaged in the mackerel-fishery. mack′er-el-ler‡.

mack′in†, n. Marykin: used in the oath by the mackins.

mack′i-naw, mac′i-nō, n. 1. [Northwestern U. S.] (1) A large sharp-ended bateau, formerly extensively used by traders and explorers: named from Mackinaw in Michigan, where it originated. Called also Mackinaw boat. (2) A thick heavy blanket used by Indians, lumbermen, etc.; a Mackinaw blanket.

A Mackinaw.

2. [U. S.] A hat plaited from coarse straw.—Mackinaw trout, the lake-trout. See illus. under NAMAYCUSH.

mack′in-tosh, mak′in-tesh, n. 1. A garment, particularly an overgarment or cloak, made water-proof by the application of a solution of india-rubber.

She hardly at first took note of a man in a white mackintosh whom she saw riding down the street. T. HARDY Tess of the D'Urbervilles bk. v, ch. 51, p. 375. [H. '92.]

2. Thin rubber-coated cloth: used also attributively. [< Mackintosh, the inventor.] mac′in-tosh‡.

mack′ish, mak′ish, a. [Prov. Eng.] Stylish. mack′er-ly‡.

mack′le, mac′l, vt. [MACK′LED; MACK′LING.] Print. To make a blurred impression of.

mack′le, n. Print. A spot or blemish; also, a blurred impression by bad presswork. [< F. macle, < L. macula, spot.] mac′le‡; mac′ule‡.

mac′le, mac′l, n. 1. Mineral. (1) A twin crystal. (2) Chiastolite. 2. Same as MACKLE. 3. Same as MASCLE. [F., < L. macula, spot.]

Mac-leay′an, mac-lē′ən, a. Of or pertaining to William S. Macleay, a Scottish naturalist; as, the Macleayan or quinary system of classification.

mac′led, mac′ld, a. 1. Spotted or checkered, like chiastolite. 2. Twinned, as a crystal. 3. Her. Same as MASCLED. mac-lée′‡.

Mac-lur′e-a, mac-lūr′ē-ə (-liū′rē-ə, W.), n. Conch. 1. A genus typical of Maclureidæ. 2. [m-] A fossil gastropod of this genus. [< William Maclure, geologist.]

Mac″lu-re′i-dæ, mac′lu-rī′i-dī or -rē′i-dē, n. pl. Conch. The Macluritidæ.

mac-lure′ite, mac-lūr′ait, n. 1. Mineral. (1) A deep-green to black pyroxene. (2) Same as CHONDRODITE. 2. A fossil macluritoid shell. [< William Maclure, geologist.] mac-lur′ite‡.

mac-lur′in, mac-lūr′in, n. A pale-yellow crystalline coloring-matter ($C_{19}H_{10}O_8$) contained in fustic. Called also morintannic acid and morin jaune. [< William Maclure, geologist.]

Mac″lu-rit′i-dæ, mac′lu-rit′i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Conch. A Lower Silurian family of gastropods, generally referred to the Rhipidoglossa, having a depressed spire and wide umbilicus, and thick pancispiral operculum with internal apophyses. Mac″lu-rī′tes, n. (t. g.) [< William Maclure, geologist.]

—mac-lur′i-tid, n.—mac-lur′i-toid, a.

Ma′con†, n. Same as MAHOUND.

maç″on-né′, mas″ən-nē′, pp. [F.] Her. Marked as with joints in masonry, as in a castle. ma′soned‡.

mac′ou-ba, mac′ū-bə, n. Maccaboy: the more correct but less usual spelling. mac′cou-ba‡.

macr-. See MACRO-.

mac-rad′e-nous, mac-rad′ə-nus, a. Characterized by large glands. [< MACR- + Gr. adēn, gland.]

mac″ra-mé′, mac″rə-mē′, C. (-rā′mā, E.; mac′rə-mē, W.), n. A fringe or trimming of knotted thread or cord; knotted work. [< It. macrame, perhaps < Ar.]

mac-rau′chen, mac-rē′ken, a. Characterized by a long neck. [< Gr. makrauchēn; see MACRAUCHENIA.]

Mac″rau-che-ni′i-dæ, mac″rē-ke-nī′i-dī or -rau-ke-nī′i-dē, n. pl. Mam. A Tertiary South-American family of ungulates having an almost uninterrupted series of 22 teeth in each jaw, molars rhinoceros-like, and incisors with infolded enamel as in horses, and 3 toes to each foot. Mac″rau-che′ni-a, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. makrauchēn, long-necked, < makros, long, + auchēn, neck.]

—mac-rau′chene, mac″rau-che′ni-id, n.—mac″rau-che′ni-i-form″, a. Having the form of a macrauchenild.—mac″rau-che′ni-oid, a. & n.

mac″ren-ceph-al′ic, a. Same as MACROCEPHALIC.

mac′ri-of, n. Same as MACKEREL.

macro-, macr-. Derived from Greek makros, long, large: combining forms. [For words beginning with macro- not found in this group, see vocabulary place.]—Mac″ro-bi-ot′i-dæ, n. pl. Arach. A family of arctiscans having an oblong oval body, no palpi, and a globular pharynx with masticatory lamellæ. Mac″ro-bi′o-tus, n. (t. g.)—mac″ro-bi′o-tid, a. & n.—mac″ro-bi′o-toid, a.—Mac″ro-cam′e-ræ, n. pl. Spong. A tribe or subtribe of a larger sponge-group with large chambers.—mac″ro-cam′e-rate, a. 1. Large-chambered. 2. Of or pertaining to the Macrocameræ.—mac″ro-car′pous, a. Large-fruited.—mac″ro-chæ′ta, n. Entom. One of certain bristles, or large stiff setæ, on the thorax and legs of some Diptera.—mac″ro-chei′li-a, n. The state of being macrochellous.—mac″ro-chei′lous, a. Having large or enlarged lips.—mac″ro-chei′rous, a. Same as MACROCHIROUS.—mac″ro-chem′ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to macrochemistry.—mac″ro-chem′is-try, n. The chemistry that has to do with the properties and relations of compounds other than those which are considered through the microscope: opposed to microchemistry.—mac″ro-chi′ra, n. Terat. Excessive development of the hands. mac″ro-chei′ra‡; mac″ro-chei′ri-a‡; mac″ro-chi′ri-a‡.—Mac″ro-chi′res, n. pl. Ornith. An order or suborder of ægithognathous birds with the terminal or hand portion of the wing longer than the proximal, as in swifts and humming-birds.—Mac″ro-chi-rop′te-ra, n. pl. Mam. The Frugivora.—mac″ro-chi-rop′ter, n.—mac″ro-chi-rop′ter-an, a. & n.—mac″ro-chi′rous, a. Having large hands.—Mac″ro-cho″a-ni′tes, n. pl. Conch. A group of nautiloidean cephalopods with long septal funnels.—mac″ro-cho′a-nite, a. & n.—mac″roc-ne′mi-a, n. The state of being macrocnemic.—mac″roc-ne′mic, a. Having long legs.—mac″ro-coc′cus, n. One of certain large bacteria or cocci.—mac″ro-co′li-a, n. The state of being macrocolous.—mac-roc′o-lous, a. Characterized by long limbs.—mac″ro-co-nid′i-um, n. Bot. A large conidium. Compare MICROCONIDIUM.—mac″ro-cyst, n. 1. A large cyst or spore-case. 2. An intercalated resting-stage assumed in the young plasmodia of Myxomycetes by swarm-spores under unfavorable conditions, such as lack of warmth and moisture. Compare MICROCYST.—Mac″ro-cys′tis, n. Bot. A genus of gigantic laminariaceous seaweeds, the only species being M. pyrifera, of the southern hemisphere, which often attains a length of several hundred feet.—mac″ro-dac′tyl. I. a. Macrodactylous. II. n. One of the Macrodactyla or of the Macrodactyli.—Mac″ro-dac′ty-la, n. pl. Entom. A tribe of clavicorn beetles with long tarsi.—Mac″ro-dac′ty-li, n. pl. 1. Ornith. A former division of grallatorial birds with long toes, as in jacanas, rails, etc. 2. Entom. The Macrodactyla.—mac″ro-dac-tyl′i-a, n. The condition of having long fingers. mac″ro-dac′ty-lism‡.—mac″ro-dac′ty-lous, a. Having long toes. mac″ro-dac-tyl′ic‡.—mac″ro-di-ag′o-nal. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or parallel to the long diagonal. II. n. Crystal. The longer lateral axis in the orthorhombic and triclinic systems.—mac′ro-dome, n. Crystal. A dome parallel to the macrodiagonal. See illus. under BRACHYDOME. mac″ro-do-mat′ic‡.—mac′ro-dont. I. a. Having large teeth. II. n. A large-toothed animal.—mac′-ro-dont-ism, n.—mac′ro-gas″ter, n. An individual having a large belly.—mac″ro-glos′sate, a. Having a long tongue or tongue-like organ. mac″ro-glos′sin(e)‡.—mac″ro-glos′si-a, n. Pathol. Excessive development of the tongue; prolapsus of the tongue.—Mac″ro-gloss-si′næ, n. pl. Mam. A subfamily of pteropodoid bats with a very long tongue and low narrow molars. Mac″ro-glos′sus, n. (t. g.)—mac″ro-glos′sin(e), a. & n.—mac″rog-nath′ic, a. Having unusually long jaws; prognathous. mac-rog′na-thous‡.—mac-rog′na-thism, n. The condition of being macrognathic. mac″rog-nath′i-a‡.—Mac″ro-lep′i-dop′te-ra, n. pl. Entom. A division of lepidopters, including the butterflies and larger moths: opposed to Tineina or Microlepidoptera.—mac″ro-lep′i-dop′ter, n.—mac″ro-lep′i-dop′ter-ous, a.—mac″ro-lep′i-dop′ter-ist, n. A student of the Macrolepidoptera.—mac″ro-me′li-a, n. Terat. The condition of having some member unusually developed. mac-rom′-e-lism‡.—mac″ro-me-rit′ic, a. Of or pertaining to a granitoid structure of rocks that is discernible by the naked eye: opposed to micromeritic.—mac″ro-mol′e-cule, n. A compound or multiple molecule.—mac″ro-my′e-lon, n. The medulla oblongata.—mac″ro-my′e-lon-al, a.—mac″ro-no′si-a, n. Med. Any chronic or prolonged disease.—mac″ro-nu′cle-us, n. Biol. A large nucleus, especially the larger of two nuclei, as in infusorians.—mac″ro-pet′al-ous, a. Bot. Having large petals.—mac″ro-pho′nous, a. Loud-voiced; stentorian.—

mac″roph-thal′mic, a. Having large eyes. mac″roph-thal′mous†.—Mac″roph-thal′mi-dæ, n. pl. Crust. The Ocypodidæ. Mac″roph-thal′mus, n. (t. g.) —mac″roph-thal′mid, n.—mac″roph-thal′moid, a.—mac″ro-phyl′lin(e, a. Bot. Consisting of extended leaflets or leaf-like expansions.—mac″ro-phyl′lous, a. Bot. Large-leaved.—mac-ro′pi-a, n. Pathol. An abnormal condition of vision in which objects appear magnified.—Mac″ro-pi′na, n. pl. Mam. The Macropodinæ. —mac″ro-pin(e, a.—mac″ro-pin′a-coid, n. Crystal. A pinacoid parallel to the vertical and macrodiagonal axes. See illus. under BRACHYDOME.—mac″ro-pin″a-coid′al, a.—Mac′ro-pi″per, I. (Mac-rop′i-per, C.), n. A small genus of Pacific-island shrubs of the pepper family. The root of M. methysticum is the ava or kava of the Polynesians.—mac″ro-pleu′ral, a. Having long pleura, as certain trilobites.—mac′ro-prism, n. Crystal. A prism whose intercept on the macrodiagonal is greater than unity. See illus. under BRACHYDOME.—mac″ro-pros′o-pous, a. Having an abnormally large face.—mac″ro-pros′o-pus, n. One having a great face; specifically, in the cabalistic system, a name of Kether, the Crown, the first Sephira, father of all. See SEPHIRA. —mac-rop′ter, n. An animal having long fins or wings. —Mac-rop′te-res, n. pl. The Longipennes.—mac-rop′ter-ous, a. Having long wings. mac-rop′ter-an†.—mac″ro-pyr′a-mid, n. Crystal. A pyramid whose intercept on the macrodiagonal is greater than unity. —Mac″ro-rham-phos′i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of hemibranchiate fishes with a compressed body, bony plates anteriorly, a tubiform snout, and a short spinous dorsal; trumpet- or snipe-fishes. Mac″ro-rham-pho′sus, n. (t. g.)—mac″ro-rham-pho′sid, n.—mac″ro-rham-pho′soid, a. & n.—mac′ro-rhin(e, a. Having a long or large nose. mac″ro-rhi′nous‡; mac″ror-rhi′nous‡.—mac-ros′cel-es, n. An individual having long legs.—mac″ro-scel′i-a, n. Terat. The condition of having long or large legs.—Mac″ro-scel-id′i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. An African family of dilambdodont insectivores with saltatorial hind limbs and tibia, and fibula ankylosed below; jumping shrews. Mac″ro-scel′i-des, n. (t. g.) Mac″ro-scel′i-dæ‡.—mac″ro-scel′i-dan, n.—mac″ro-scel′i-did, n. —mac″ro-scel′i-doid, a. & n.—mac-ros′cel-ous, a. Having abnormally long legs.—mac-ros′ci-an. I. a. Having a long shadow. II. n. An inhabitant of the arctic or antarctic zone.—mac″ro-sep′al-ous, a. Bot. Having large sepals.—mac″ro-sep′tum, n. Zooph. A large fertile septum, as in corals.—mac″ro-si′phon, n. Conch. The large horny internal siphon of certain cephalopods.—mac″ro-si-phon′u-la, n. Conch. The larval stage of certain cephalopods when the macrosiphon appears. —mac″ro-si-phon′u-lar, a. Of or pertaining to a macrosiphon.—mac″ro-si-phon′u-late, a. Having a macrosiphon.—mac″ros-mat′ic, a. Having the organs of smell largely developed, as most mammals.—mac″ro-so-ma′ti-a, n. Excessive size of the whole body. mac″ro-so′mi-a‡.—mac″ro-so′mic, a. Having an unusually large body. mac″ro-so′mous‡.—mac″ro-so′mite, n. A large primary somite or metamere.—mac″ro-so-mit′ic, a.—mac″ro-spo-ran′gi-o-phore, n. Bot. An axis or axial organ bearing macrosporangia.—mac″ro-spo-ran′gi-um, n. Bot. A sporangium containing macrospores. Called also megasporangium. mac″ro-spo-range″‡.—mac″ro-spore, n. A relatively large spore. (1) Bot. One of the asexually produced (female) spores of certain vascular cryptogams.

The spores [in Pteridophyta] are in most cases of one kind, but in certain genera there are large spores (macrospores), and small ones (microspores). BESSEY Botany ¶ 470, p. 362. [H. H. & CO.]

(2) Protoz. One of the larger of the two kinds of anisospores.—mac″ro-spor′ic, a.—mac″ro-spo′ro-phyl, n. Bot. A leaf bearing macrospores. mac″ro-spo′ro-phyll‡.—Mac″ro-ste-lin′i-æ, n. pl. Zooph. A section of polygastric cystonectous siphonophores with the trunk of the siphosome tubular.—mac″ro-ste-lin′i-an, a.—mac-ros′to-ma, n. 1. Terat. An abnormal extension of the mouth toward the ear. 2. [M-] Helminth. A genus typical of Macrostomidæ.—mac′ro-stome, n. A gastropod having a shell with large mouth, as an ear-shell.—mac″ro-sto′mi-a, n. Congenital fissure of the lips.—Mac″ro-stom′i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of rhabdocœlous turbellarians with an anterior female and posterior male orifice and simple pharynx.—mac-ros′to-mid, n. —mac-ros′to-moid, a.—mac-ros′to-mous, a. Having an abnormally large mouth. mac″ro-stom′a-tous‡.—mac″ro-sty′lo-spore, n. A large stylospore.—Mac″ro-the-ri′i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. The Chalicotheriidæ in part. Mac″ro-the′ri-um, n. (t. g.)—mac′ro-there, n.—mac″ro-the′ri-id, n.—mac″ro-the′ri-oid, a.—mac′ro-tone, n. Same as MACRON.—mac-ro′tous, a. Large-eared.—mac′ro-ty″pous, a. Mineral. Characterized by a long form. [C.] —mac″ro-zo″o-go-nid′i-um, n. Bot. A large zoogonidium. meg″a-zo″o-go-nid′i-um‡.—mac″ro-zo′o-spore, n. Bot. A large zoospore. meg″a-zo′o-spore‡.

mac-ro′bi-an, mac-rō′bi-ɑn, n. One who lives long, especially over a hundred years; one of the Biblical characters who lived to great age; a macrobiote.

mac″ro-bi-o′sis, mac″ro-bi-ō′sis, n. [Gr.] Longevity.

mac-ro′bi-ote, mac-rō′bi-ōt, n. One who or that which is long-lived. [< Gr. makrobiotos, long-lived, < makros, long, + bios, life.]

—mac″ro-bi-ot′ic, a. Of or pertaining to long life. —macrobiotic art, the art of living long.—mac″ro-bi-ot′ics, n. The art of producing longevity.

mac″ro-ceph-a′li-a, mac″ro-sef-ā′li-ɑ or -ʃ′li-ɑ, n. Med. The quality or state of being macrocephalous: said especially of a fetus.

mac″ro-ceph-al′ic, mac″ro-sef-al′ic, a. 1. Having an unusually large head or brain; specifically, having a cranium of a capacity of over 1,950 cubic centimeters. 2. Anc. Pros. Same as PROCEPHALIC. [< Gr. makrokephalos, < makros, large, + kephalē, head.]

mac″ro-ceph′a-lism, mac″ro-sef′ɑ-lizm, n. The state or quality of being macrocephalic. mac″ro-ceph′a-ly‡.—mac″ro-ceph′a-lous, a. 1. Macrocephalic. 2. Bot. Large-headed: said of a dicotyledonous embryo when the cotyledons are confluent into a larger head-like mass.—mac″ro-ceph′a-lus, n. Med. One having an unusually large head.

mac′ro-cosm, mac′ro-cezm, C. I. S. W. (mē′cro-, Wr.) (XIII), n. 1. The great world; the universe or cosmos exterior to man, as opposed to man, the microcosm.

Matter in particle and planet, mind and macrocosm, is quick with spirit. A. BRONSON ALCOTT Table-Talk, Conscience bk. ii, p. 159. [R. BROS. '77.]

2. The whole of any sphere or department of nature or knowledge to which man is related, or of which he forms a part. [< MACRO- + Gr. kosmos, world.]

—mac″ro-cos′mic, a.—mac″ro-cos-mol′o-gy, n. Description of the macrocosm.

mac′ro-cyst, mac″ro-dac′tyl, etc. See MACRO-.

mac″ro-go-nid′i-um, mac′ro-go-nid′i-um, n. Bot. A large gonidium. 2. Protoz. An individual of normal size regarded as equivalent to an egg-cell, as in certain flagellate infusorians. [< MACRO- + GONIDIUM.]

mac-rol′o-gy, mac-rol′o-gi, n. Long speech with little sense. [< LL. macrologia, < Gr. makrologia, < makros, long, + legō, speak.]

mac′ro-mere, mac′ro-mir, n. One of the larger of the two kinds of cells resulting from the division of teloleci-thal eggs: opposed to micromere. [< MACRO- + Gr. meros, part.]

—mac′ro-me″ral, a.—mac″ro-mer′ic, a.

mac-rom′e-ter, mac-rem′ē-ter, C. (mɑ-crēm′-, W.), n. An instrument like a sextant, for measuring distant objects by means of two telescopes. [< MACRO- + -METER.]

mac′ron, mac′ren, C. E. (mē′cren, I. W. Wr.), n. In orthoepy, a straight line (—) placed over a vowel to show that it is long: opposed to breve (⏑). [< Gr. makron, neut. s. of makros, long.] mac′ro-tone‡.

mac″ro-nu′cle-us, etc. See MACRO-.

mag³, n. 1. [Eng.] A halfpenny. 2. [Scot.] A servant's fee; gratuity. maik‡; make‡.

mag'a-dis†, n. 1. A Greek lyre of twenty strings, arranged in octaves. 2. A monochord.

mag'a-dize†, vi. Anc. Gr. Mus. 1. To play on the magadis. 2. To play in octaves.

ma'gart, n. A ship.

mag″a-ri'ta, mag'ą-rī'tą or -rī'tą, n. In medieval times, a Christian apostate, especially one embracing Mohammedanism. [LL., < Gr. magaritēs, < magarizō, defile.] mag″-a-ri'tes‡.

ma'gas, mē'gas or mą'gąs, n. [Gr.] 1. The bridge of a cithera. 2. A fret of a lute or similar instrument.

mag″a-zine', mag'ą-zīn', v. [-ZINED'; -ZIN'ING.] [Rare.] I. t. To store up or accumulate for future use. II. i. To edit or manage a magazine. —mag″a-zin'ist, n. A contributor to magazines. mag″a-zin'er‡.

mag″a-zine', n. 1. A house, room, or receptacle in which anything is stored; by extension, the collection of things so stored.

Congress will perceive, that valuable magazines both of provisions and forage may be laid up in the upper settlements on the Connecticut river. WASHINGTON in Sparks's Writings of Washington, Sept. 12, 1778 vol. ii, pt. ii, p. 66. [H. G. & CO. '34.]

Specifically: (1) A strong building for storing gunpowder and other military stores. (2) Naut. A storeroom for gunpowder aboard ship. (3) The chamber supplying fuel in a magazine stove. (4) The cartridge-chamber of a repeating rifle. 2. A periodical publication, generally issued monthly, containing stories, sketches, essays, and the like, and often illustrated. The "Gentleman's Magazine," issued in London in 1731, was the first published. [< OF. magazin, < It. magazzino, < Ar. makhāzin, pl. of makhzan, storehouse.] —mag″a-zine'-dress″, n. A woolen dress worn by workmen in powder-magazines. —m.-screen, n. A curtain used in war-ships for the protection of the magazine, having in it an aperture through which ammunition is served.

mag-da'la, mag-dā'lą, C. (mag'da-lą, E. W.), n. A coal-tar dyestuff ($C_{39}H_{31}N_4Cl$) derived from naphthylamin, used to dye silk. Called also naphthalene red. [< Magdala, in Abyssinia.]

mag'da-len, mag'da-len, n. A repentant harlot: in allusion to Mary Magdalene, of the New Testament, improperly identified by tradition with the "woman which was a sinner" of Luke vii, 37–50. mag'da-lene‡.

mag″da-le-ne'um, mag'da-lę-nī'um or -nē'um, n. An asylum or hospital for magdalens. [< MAGDALEN.]

Mag″da-le'ni-an, mag'da-lī'ni-ąn, a. Belonging to the archeological epoch typified by the remains found in the deposit of La Madeleine, on the river Vézère, France. This station has furnished a great number of antlers and bones ornamented with figures of horses, reindeer, fish, and even of elephants and mammoths.

mag-da'le-on, mag-dā'lę-en, n. 1. A pill or other medicine prepared with bread-crums. 2. A roll of plaster. [OF., < Gr. magdalia, crum, < massō, knead.]

mage, mēj, n. One who practises magic arts; a magician. [F., < L. magus, < Gr. magos, magician, < Magos, a Magus, prob. < Zend maz, great.]

Mag″el-lan'ic, maj'el-lan'ic, C.[1] S. W. Wr. (mag'-, C.[2] E. I.) (xiii), a. Of, pertaining to, or named after the Portuguese navigator Magellan, who died in 1521.

ma-gen'ta, mą-jen'tą, n. A coal-tar dyestuff derived from anilin, usually the hydrochlorid or acetate of rosanilin. Called also anilin red, ponceau, rosein, rubin. [F., < Magenta, in Italy, it having been discovered in the year (1859) of the battle of Magenta.]

magged, magd, a. Naut. Frayed or worn: said of a rope.

mag'gie, mag'i, n. [Scot.] The guillemot.

mag'got, mag'ǫt, n. 1. The larva of a fly; a footless insect-larva; a grub. 2. Figuratively, a whim or fancy; as, to have a maggot in the head.

He was a harmless crittur . . . but queer. Ay, he was full o' maggots. J. M. BARRIE When a Man's Single ch. 1, p. 16. [H. '89.]

[< W. maceiad, < magu, breed.] mag'get†.

—mag'got-pa″ted†, a. Crotchety. mag'got-y-head″ed†.

—mag'got-y, a. 1. Infested with maggots; fly-blown. 2. [Rare.] Having strange fancies; whimsical. mag'got-ish‡. —mag'got-i-ness, n.

ma'ghet, mā'get, n. Any one of various plants of the aster family (Compositæ), with white ray-flowers, as the daisies, etc. mai'thes‡. [Cp. Flem. maghet, maid.]

Ma'ghra-bin, n. Same as MOGRABIN.

Ma'gi, mē'jī or mą'gī, n. pl. [MA'GUS, mē'gus or mą'gus, sing.] [L.] 1. The learned and priestly caste of the Medes and ancient Persians, and later of the Zoroastrians: probably originally an Accadian priestly caste that became among the Medes and Persians the keepers of the sacred things, tutors of the kings, philosophers, augurs, and astrologers. They are first referred to in the use of Rab-mag in Jer. xxxix, 3, 13. See MAGIC.

The priesthood of this sect [fire-worshipers] were called mobeds or magi.
S. G. W. BENJAMIN Story of Persia ch. 7, p. 88. [G. P. P. '87.]

2. Hence, any Oriental sages; specifically, the wise men who came to worship the Infant Savior. Matt. ii, 1, 2.

—Ma'gi-an. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Magi. II. n. One of the Magi. —Ma'gi-an-ism, n. 1. The creed and cult of the Magi: essentially a worship of the elements. 2. The dualistic religion and philosophy of the Parsees; Zoroastrianism.

mag'ic, maj'ic, a. 1. Of the nature of magic; possessing supernatural or superhuman powers; acting through occult agencies; necromantic; sorcerous; enchanting.

Come, bring thy wand, whose magic power
FELICIA D. HEMANS Address to Fancy st. 1.

2. Effected by magic; produced by occult supernatural agency; magical; as, magic structures. 3. Acting like magic; wonder-working; as, magic influence. [< L.

magicus, < Gr. magikos, magical, of the Magi, < Magos; see MAGE.]

—magic circle, a series of eight concentric circles, which, when divided by radii, have their sections thus made labeled with numbers in such manner that, after the fashion of the magic square, a constant total shall result from adding those in each circle and row.—m. lantern, a device for throwing pictures on a screen, consisting of a source of light, a lens or mirror to concentrate the light on one side of a transparent painting or photograph on glass, and a system of lenses placed in front of the illuminated picture to cast an enlarged image of it on the screen. The light and its accessaries are commonly enclosed in a close box, from which projects a tube containing the lenses. Called also projecting lantern.—m. square. 1. Numbers arranged in a square in such manner that the sum of the horizontal, perpendicular, and diagonal rows is constant, as in the example, where the constant sum is 15. If the properties of a magic square remain the same when the bottom line is transposed to the top, or the left-hand column to the right margin any number of times, it is said to be perfect; otherwise, imperfect or ordinary. 2. By extension, a similar square in which the products of the rows are the same, or one in which letters are so arranged that a word or phrase can be read in various directions.—magic-tree, n. An evergreen greenhouse shrub (Cantua buxifolia) of the phlox family (Polemoniaceæ), formerly used by the natives of Peru on festive occasions for decorating their houses.—m. wand, a magician's wand.

mag'ic, n. 1. Any pretended or supposed supernatural or occult art: a generic term for all occult arts. Specifically: (1) The pretended art of putting into action the power of spirits; especially, the pretended art of producing preternatural effects by bringing into play the action of supernatural or spiritual beings, of departed spirits, or of the occult powers of nature.

But while magic was used primarily to denote the study of the more sublime parts of knowledge, it came at length to signify a science of which the cultivators, by the help of demons or departed souls, could perform things miraculous.
K.-P. Vocab. Philos. p. 297. [SH. & CO. '78.]

(2) The practises, ceremonies, etc., connected with this art. (3) The practise of the black art; dealings with the devil; sorcery; necromancy. 2. Sleight of hand; legerdemain. 3. Any agency that works with wonderful effect; the enchantment of beauty, art, or the like; as, the magic of her glance. [< OF. magique, < LL. magica, prop. f. of L. magicus; see MAGIC, a.] mag'yk†; mag'yke†.

—black magic, same as MAGIC, n., 1 (3).—celestial m., a magic that, through the spirits, was supposed to give the planets an influence over man.—natural m., the working of apparent wonders through the agency of natural laws.—superstitious or goetic m., incantation of demons in accordance with a supposed express or implied compact with them.—white m., innocent and beneficent magic, involving no compact with Satan.

mag'ic-al, maj'ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to magic; produced by or as by magic; magic.

Synonyms: magic, Magic is applied more commonly to the powers, influences, or practises, while magical is more frequently used of the effects of magic; we speak of magic arts, a magic wand, but of magical effect, a magical result; the magic art of Circe produced magical transformations of her victims. In many cases, however, the choice between the two words is determined by euphony, or, in poetry, by meter.

ma-gi'cian, mə-jish'ən, n. 1. An expert in magic arts; a sorcerer; necromancer; wizard.

The Decemvirs passed a law condemning magicians to death. A similar law was early enacted in Greece; and, in the days of Demosthenes, a sorceress named Lemia was actually executed.
LECKY Rationalism in Europe vol. i, ch. i, p. 42. [A. '88.]

2†. A Magian. [< F. magicien, < LL. magica, magic; see MAGIC, n.] ma-gil'p, mə gil'p, n. A mixture used as a vehicle for oil-colors, usually composed of a pale drying-oil and a turpentine varnish, such as mastic. mac-gilp'†; ma-gilph'†; me-gel'lup†; me-gilp'†.

Mu'gism, n. Same as MAGIANISM.

ma-gis'ter, maj'is-tər or -gis'tər, n. [L.] Chief; master: a scholastic title intermediate between bachelor and doctor; now used only in the phrase magister artium or artium magister (master of arts). See MASTER.

mag"is-te'ri-al, maj'is-tē'ri-əl, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a magistrate or magistracy; like or befitting a master; commanding; authoritative. 2. Hence, having an air of authority; dictatorial; oracular; pompous. 3. Pertaining to a chemist's or alchemist's magistery. [< LL. magisterius, < L. magister; see MASTER, n.]

Synonyms: see DOGMATIC.

—mag"is-te'ri-al, n. Same as MAGISTERY.—mag"is-te'ri-al-ly, adv.—mag"is-te'ri-al-ness, n. Magisterial character. mag"is-te"ri-al'i-ty†.

mag'is-ter-y, maj'is-tər-i, n. [-IES, pl.] 1. An authoritative statement or exposition; a magisterial decree. 2. A masterwork or chief production; specifically, in alchemy, the transmutation of metals; the philosopher's stone; also, a sovereign remedy; panacea. 3. Chem. A compound, as a precipitate, formed when two liquids are mixed and differing in character from either: a term used by the older chemists to distinguish compounds of unknown composition from known preparations, as extracts, etc., and preserved in the phrase magistery of bismuth. [< LL. magisterium, < L. magister; see MASTER, n.] mag"is-te'ri-um†; mag'is-tral†; maj'es-ter-y†.

mag'is-tra-cy, maj'is-trə-si, W. (-trē-si, C.), n. [-CIES, pl.] 1. The office or dignity of a magistrate. 2. Magistrates collectively.

mag'is-tral, maj'is-trəl, a. 1. Like a magistrate or magister; imperious or pedagogical; magisterial. 2. Pharm. Specially compounded or prescribed; not kept in stock. 3. Having sovereign power as medicine. 4. Chief; as, the magistral line. See MAGISTRAL, n., 1. [< L. magistralis, < magister; see MASTER, n.] —magistral method, a schoolmasters' method of inculcating truths by authority, authoritative teaching.

mag'is-tral, n. 1. Fort. The line from which the positions of the various members of a fortification are determined. Called also magistral line. 2. Metal. Pulverized copper pyrites, roasted in free air, for amalgamating silver ores by the patio process. 3. Eccl. A prebendary or canon of a Spanish cathedral, whose office is to preach or teach. 4†. A sovereign medicine or remedy.

mag"is-trand', maj'is-trand', n. [Scot.] In the University of Aberdeen, a student in his last year.

mag'is-trate, maj'is-trēt, n. 1. One clothed with public civil authority; an executive or judicial officer.

The term is most commonly applied to civil officers exercising large discretionary power, especially to administrative chiefs, as governors, prefects, mayors, etc., and to justices of the peace and other local and minor judicial functionaries whose authority to restrain people of their liberty is most obvious, as a committing magistrate, police magistrates, district magistrates in India, and stipendiary magistrates in England.

Few republican States have invested a single magistrate with such large powers as the American President. E. A. FREEMAN Historical Essays first series, essay xii, p. 375. [MACM. '75.]

2. Usually, when unqualified, a minor local justice; as, to be examined before a magistrate. 3†. Magistracy. [< F. magistrat, < L. magistratus, < magister; see MASTER, n.].—chief magistrate, the highest civil officer, as a president of a republic, or a sovereign.

—mag"is-trat'ic, mag"is-trat'ic-al, a.

We might enquire into the vexations . . . that are produced by the dreams of greatness or magistratical vanity. WILLIAM GODWIN Political Justice vol. ii, bk. viii, ch. i, p. 788. [ROB. 1793.]

—mag'is-tra-ture, n. Magistracy; government.

mag'ma, mag'mə, n. 1. Any soft doughy mass. 2. Geol. (1) The molten mass within the earth's crust, the source of igneous eruptions. (2) The glassy base of an igneous rock. 3. Pharm. (1) The residuum obtained after expressing the juice from fruits; pomace; as, magma of grapes. (2) The settlings remaining after treating some substance with a liquid solvent or menstruum. (3) Any crude mixture or amalgam of mineral or organic matters in a state of paste for use as a salve. 4. A confection. [< Gr. magma, < massō, knead.]

—mag-mat'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the magma of igneous rock.

Mag'na Char'ta, mag'nə cär'tə. [L.] 1. The Great Charter: the charter of English liberties, dated June 15, 1215, but actually sealed (not signed) and delivered June 19, 1215, by King John, at Runnymede, on the demand of the barons of England. This instrument, solemnly declaratory of the rights of the people, has for more than six centuries been regarded as the basis of English constitutional liberty. Among its more important provisions were exemption from arbitrary arrest, trial by a jury of one's peers, a provision that justice should be neither sold, denied, nor delayed, and the protection of life, liberty, and property from unlawful deprivation.

2. By extension, any fundamental constitution that secures personal liberty and civil rights.

mag-na'li-a, mag-nē'li-ə or -nā'li-ə, n. pl. [LL.] Great events or deeds; as, Mather's "Magnalia."

mag-nal'i-ty†, n. A great deed; consummation.

ma-gnan'e-rie, mə-nyän'ə-ri, n. [F.] The culture of silkworms; also, an establishment for rearing silkworms.

mag-nan'i-mate†, vt. To make great-souled; ennoble.

mag"na-nim'i-ty, mag'nə-nim'i-ti, n. The quality of being magnanimous; greatness of soul; generosity in sentiment or conduct toward others; exaltation above envious, cowardly, vindictive, or selfish motives; loftiness of character or action; large-heartedness. [< L. magnanimitat-is, < magnanimus; see MAGNANIMOUS.]

The President, in giving to his most powerful and most distinguished rival (Chief Justice Chase) the greatest place which a President ever has it in his power to bestow, gave an exemplary proof of the magnanimity and generosity of his own spirit. STEDMAN AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. ix, ch. 17, p. 402. [C. CO. '90.]

mag-nan'i-mous, mag-nan'i-məs, a. 1. Characterized by magnanimity; elevated in soul; generous in treating or judging others; great- or high-minded; scorning what is mean or base.

Mighty of heart, mighty of mind — magnanimous - to be this, is indeed to be great in life: to become this increasingly is . . . to advance in life. RUSKIN Sesame lect. i, p. 65. [W. & S. '65.]

2. Dictated by magnanimity; exhibiting nobleness of soul; liberal; unselfish: as, magnanimous candor. [< L. magnanimus, < magnus, great, + animus, soul.]

mag'nate, mag'nēt, n. 1. A person of rank or importance; a noble or grandee; one notable in any sphere; as, a city magnate. 2. Specifically, a member of the upper house of the Hungarian, and formerly of the Polish, parliament. [< LL. magnat-is, < L. magnus, great.]

mag"ne-crys-tal'lic, mag'nē-kris-tal'ik, a. Relating to the action of crystallized bodies in presence of a magnet. [< MAGNET + CRYSTAL.]

mag-ne'si-a, mag-nē'shi-ə (XIII), n. Chem. A light, white, earthy powder, used in medicine as an antacid and as a laxative, consisting of magnesium oxid. It can be made by burning magnesium or by igniting certain of the magnesium salts. [LL., < L. Magnesius, Magnesian, < Gr. Magnēsios, < Magnēsia, district in Thessaly, whence the mineral was brought.]—magnesia alba, a light, white, hydrous magnesium carbonate prepared by pulverizing the mineral magnesite, or by chemical means; used in medicine as an antacid. Called also magnesii carbonas.

mag-ne'sian, mag-nē'shian, a. Of, pertaining to, or containing magnesium. mag-ne'sic‡.

—magnesian limestone, same as DOLOMITE.

mag'ne-site, mag'nē-sīt, C. J. W. Wr. (-zīt, E. S. W.), n. Mineral. A massive, granular, compact, vitreous, white to brown magnesium carbonate ($MgCO_3$), crystallizing in the hexagonal system. Called also giobertite, breunerite, brownespar.

mag-ne'sium, mag-nē'shium, *C. E. W.*² (-zhi-əm, *W.*¹ Wr.), n. A light, malleable and ductile, silver-white metallic element, used chiefly in the form of ribbon or powder to produce a brilliant light by its combustion, as in signaling, photography, or pyrotechny. See ELEMENT. [< MAGNESIA.]

—mag-ne'sium-lamp", n. A lamp for burning magnesium.—m. sulfate, same as EPSOM SALT.

—mag-ne"si-o-fer'rite, n. Mineral. A metallic to submetallic, iron-black, magnetic magnesium ferrite ($MgFe_2O_4$), crystallizing in the isometric system and belonging to the spinel group. mag"no-fer'rite:.

mag'net, mag'net, n. 1. A body possessing that peculiar form of polarity found in nature in the lodestone; a body capable of exerting and being acted on by magnetic force.

Every such body has at least two opposite points or poles, each of which attracts one pole and repels the other of any other magnet. Poles that are all attracted or all repelled by the same pole (hence called like poles) repel each other; those affected oppositely by the same pole (called unlike poles) attract each other. The resultant of the forces exerted by one magnet on a second at any point causes the latter to set in a fixed direction. A magnet induces magnetism in other bodies capable of becoming magnets, especially iron or steel, and therefore attracts them, but it exerts its peculiar action only upon bodies which have magnetic properties. The earth acts like an immense magnet, of which the respective poles are within the arctic and antarctic circles, and hence causes a magnet to point nearly north and south. The end that points north is called the north, north-seeking, austral, positive, or red pole; the other, the south, south-seeking, boreal, negative, or blue pole. See AUSTRAL; BOREAL.

Magnets are either (1) natural, when, like the lodestone, they are found already magnetized, or (2) artificial, when magnetism has been given to them by placing them in the field of another magnet or in that caused by an electric current. See ELECTROMAGNET. They are permanent when their magnetism remains after they have been removed from the exciting field, and they are then said to have coercive force; otherwise they are called magnetic substances. It is possible that all substances are slightly magnetic, but practically the only permanent magnets are made of steel and iron, and the only magnetic substances are soft iron and some of its oxids, and in less degree nickel, cobalt, chromium, and manganese. See MAGNETISM; PARAMAGNETISM; DIAMAGNETISM.

A bar of iron, when placed within a helix, through the wire of which a current of electricity is flowing, becomes a powerful magnet. C. F. BRACKETT in Electricity in Daily Life p. 4. [S. '90.]

Ages ago, in Magnesia in Asia Minor, were found certain hard black stones which possessed the remarkable property of attracting to themselves bits of iron and steel. These the ancients called magnets, from the name of the locality in which they were found.
PARK BENJAMIN Age of Electricity ch. 6, p. 69. [S. '86.]

Some magnets are named (1) from their form; as, bar magnet (a straight bar), bell-shaped m. (a cylinder slotted on opposite convex sides), club-footed m. (of U-shaped core with a magnetizing coil on only one pole), horseshoe or U m. (with adjoining poles), tubular m. (of iron-clad horseshoe make with one prolonged tube-like pole); or (2) from their use or purpose; as, compensating-m., controlling-m., damping-m. (arresting vibration), deflecting- or directing-m., overload-m., receiving-m. (being either a relay-magnet or the coil-surrounded magnet of a telegraph receiver), regulator-m. See also FIELD-MAGNET.

2. Figuratively, one who or that which excites love, desire, ambition, attention, etc.; a person or thing exercising a strong attraction. [< L. magnet(-)s, < Gr. magnēs, < Magnēsia, Magnesia.] mag'nes-stone"†.

—anomalous magnet, a magnet having more than two free poles, the apparent extra one being made up of two consequent poles.—axial m., a solenoid with a straight core.—compound m., a magnet built up of a number of simple ones.—mag'net-coil", n. A coil of insulated wire or other conductor around a core that becomes an electromagnet by the passage of an electric current through the coil.

mag-net'ic, mag-net'ik, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a magnet or magnetism. Specifically: (1) Being a magnet; having the properties of a magnet. (2) Susceptible of being attracted by a magnet; especially, magnetizable by induction but having no coercive force. See note under MAGNET. (3) Of or pertaining to terrestrial magnetism. 2. Having or exerting a moral attractive force; possessing personal magnetism; as, a magnetic person.

There are natures which we call magnetic. People cannot help being drawn to them and following where they go. JAMES STALKER Imago Christi ch. 17, div. iv, p. 329. [A. & S. '90.]

3. Of or pertaining to mesmerism or animal magnetism. [< L. magnet(-)s; see MAGNET.] mag-net'ic-al‡.

Phrases:—magnetic circuit, the whole extent of a magnetic line of force, forming a closed curve: analogous to an electric circuit in some respects.—m. or hypnotic crisis, any abnormal nervous state brought about by hypnotism.—m. force, a force that, at any point where it is exerted, tends to make one pole of a magnet move in one direction, and the other pole in the opposite direction, and thus to make the magnet itself point in the direction along which the force acts. This direction defines, at each point, a certain line called a line of magnetic force. (See illus.) Such a force may be exerted or produced either by a magnet or by an electric current.—m. screen, a shell of soft iron cutting off a magnetic needle from the influence of a magnet.—m. shell, a sheet or layer of magnetic particles having all the north poles in one of its flat surfaces and all the south poles in the opposite one.—m. shield, a hollow iron case in which a watch is permanently kept to screen it from derangement by external magnetism.—m. tick, a faint click heard when a substance is magnetized or demagnetized. Called also magnetic click.—m. whirl, the lines of magnetic force which surround the circuit of an electric conductor.

Lines of Magnetic Force Around the Ends of the Poles of a Horseshoe Magnet, as shown by iron-filings sprinkled on paper in contact with the poles.

—mag-net'ic-al-ly, adv.—mag-net'ic-al-ness, n. mag-net'ic-ness‡.—mag"ne-ti'cian, n. One versed in magnetism. mag'ne-tist‡.—mag-net'ics, n. The science or principles of magnetism.—mag"net-if'er-ous, a. Producing or exhibiting magnetism.

mag-net'ic, n. A substance that has or may be given a magnetic field, or which, when in a magnetic field, ranges itself with its longest axis parallel to the force-lines, as iron, steel, nickel, and cobalt. Called also a paramagnetic, and distinguished from a diamagnetic. mag-net'ic-al†.

mag'net-ine, mag'net-in, n. 1. A hypothetical imponderable substance assumed to be the medium of magnetic phenomena. 2. A compound of cement and some magnetized material, used in magnetic belts, etc.

mag"net-i-po'lar, mag'net-i-pō'lər, a. Showing magnetic polarity. [< L. magnet(-)s (see MAGNET) + POLAR.]

mag'net-ise, etc. Same as MAGNETIZE, etc.

mag'net-ism, mag'net-izm, n. 1. That quality or agency by virtue of which certain bodies are productive of magnetic force or susceptible to its action; that unknown cause to which magnetic force is due.

According to generally received ideas, the molecules of a magnetizable body are permanent magnets, whether the body is magnetized or not, but before it is magnetized their poles point in every direction, thus neutralizing one another, and increasing magnetization causes their axes to become more and more nearly parallel. The cause of this molecular magnetism, according to Ampère's theory, is a closed electric current flowing around each molecule. This is accepted by many as a working hypothesis. See MAGNET.

Unlike light, heat, and stataeal electricity, magnetism affords no phenomena immediately addressed to the senses.
B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics ° 784, p. 514. [I. B. & CO.]

2. Physics. The science that treats of the laws and conditions of magnetic force. 3. The sympathetic personal quality that attracts or interests; attractiveness.

What is more delightful than personal magnetism? It is the charm of good fellowship as of good writing. A. BRONSON ALCOTT Concord Days, Emerson p. 36. [R. BROS. '73.]

4. Animal magnetism. See MESMERISM. [< L. magnet-is; see MAGNET.]

—animal magnetism, mesmerism: so called from the unproved and unprovable theory that the body is the seat of a system of magnetism analogous to that of the globe, and accounting for the mesmeric phenomena.

Mesmer . . . argued as follows: A needle is placed in harmonious relation with the system of the universe by being magnetized, for then it fulfils an orderly function and points always in one direction; by an analogous property the human body is placed in harmonious relation with the universe around it, this property is animal magnetism. Quarterly Review, Mesmerism and Hypnotism July, '90, p. 236.

—sidereal m., the supposed influence of the stars on the sick.— terrestrial m., the magnetic properties of the earth considered as a whole.

mag″net-ite, mag′net-āit, n. Mineral. A massive, granular, metallic or submetallic, iron-black, brittle, magnetic ferrous ferrite (Fe_3O_4), which, when pure, contains 72 per cent. of iron, crystallizing in the isometric system: an important ore of iron. Called also lodestone. [< MAGNET.] — mag″net-it′ic, a. Of or pertaining to magnetite.

mag′net-i″za-bl(e, mag′net-āi″zə-bl, a. That can be magnetized. mag′net-i″sa-bl(e‡.
— mag″net-i″za-[or -sa-]bil′i-ty, n.

mag″net-i-za′tion, mag″net-i-zē′shun, n. The act of magnetizing, or the state of being magnetized. mag″net-i-sa′tion†. — magnetization of light, the rotation of the plane of polarization of a ray passing through a transparent medium in a powerful magnetic field.— residual m., induced magnetism retained by steel or hard iron after removal from the inducing field.

mag′net-ize, mag′net-āiz, v. [-IZED; -I′ZING.] I. t. 1. To make a magnet of, permanently or temporarily; develop magnetic properties in; as, iron magnetized by an electric current. 2. To attract or stir by sympathetic personal influence; captivate. 3. To mesmerize.

II. i. To acquire magnetic properties; become magnetic. mag′net-ise‡.
— mag″net-i-zee′ or -see′, n. A mesmerized person.— mag′net-i″zer or -ser, n. 1. That which induces magnetism, as a lodestone. 2. A mesmerizer.

magneto-. Derived from MAGNET: a combining form. —mag′net-o-bell″, n. An electric bell in which the armature of the electromagnet is itself a magnet, and hence is alternately attracted and repelled when the electromagnet is excited by the alternating current of a small magneto-electric machine: used chiefly as a telephone call-bell.— m.-electric, m.-electrical, a. Of, pertaining to, or produced or affected by magneto-electricity.— m.-electricity, n. 1. Electricity generated by the inductive action of a magnet or magnets: distinguished from electromagnetism. See INDUCTION. 2. The science that treats of the phenomena and principles involving both electricity and magnetism: more commonly called electromagnetism. — m.-electric machine, a machine in which the rotation of a coil of wire near the poles of a permanent magnet induces a current of electricity in the coil: distinguished from a dynamo-electric machine, in which there is an electromagnet; abbreviated sometimes into magneto or magneto-machine. Compare DYNAMO.— m.-electric telegraph, a telegraphic system in which the currents are produced by magneto-electric machines and not by voltaic batteries.— m.-faradic apparatus, a small magneto-electric machine for producing intermittent currents for the electric treatment of diseases.— mag-net′o-gram, n. The record made by a magnetometer.— mag-net′o-graph, n. 1. A recording magnetometer. 2. A magnetogram.— mag″net-ol′o-gy, n. The science of magnetism. -mag′net-o-ma-chine″, n. Same as M.-ELECTRIC MACHINE. m.-instrument‡.— mag″net-om′e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring magnetic force by a torsion balance.— mag″net-o-met′ric, a. Of, pertaining to, or measured by the magnetometer.— mag″net-om′e-try, n. Measurement of magnetic force by means of the magnetometer.— mag″net-o-mo′tiv(e, a. Acting magnetically: distinguished from electromotive.— m.-optic, n. Relating to magneto-optics.— m.-optics, n. The branch of electro-optics that treats of the action of a magnetic field on light-rays. - mag-net′o-phone, n. An instrument for counting the number of breaks in a circuit by the pitch of the musical note given out by a telephone in such circuit: used in studying the distribution of the magnetic field of a dynamo.— mag′net-o-point″er, n. The index or hand of a magneto-electric dial telegraph.— m.-printer, n. A printing-telegraph operated by a magneto-electric machine.— mag-net′o-scope, n. 1. An instrument to show the presence of magnetic force-lines without measuring them. 2. A clairvoyant, or clairvoyant apparatus.— mag′net-o-tel″e-graph, n. Same as M.-ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.— m.-telephone, n. A telephone in which a magnet is used: the ordinary form. See TELEPHONE.— mag″net-o-ther′a-py, n. A method of treating disease by applying magnets.— m.-transmitter, n. 1. A magneto-telephone. 2. A magneto-electric machine for producing currents used in telegraphy.

mag-nif′ic, mag-nif′ic, a. [Rare.] Illustrious; magnificent. [< F. magnifique, < L. magnificus, < magnus, great, + facio, make. mag-nif′ic-al‡; mag″ni-fique″†.

Mag-nif′i-cat, mag-nif′i-cat, n. The hymn of the Virgin Mary, taken from Luke i, 46–55: named from its opening Latin word; also, the music to which it is sung. It has formed a part of the vesper service of the Western Church from an early period, and in the Oriental Church is a canticle sung at Orthros or Lauds. In the Anglican churches it can be used as one of the chants at Evening Prayer. [L., < magnificat see MAGNIFY.]

mag-nif′i-cate†, vt. Same as MAGNIFY.

mag″ni-fi-ca′tion, mag″ni-fi-kē′shun, n. 1. The act, process, or degree of magnifying.

Either he beheld a tremendous magnification of things, or else that other mendid not attach common importance to them. GEO. MEREDITH Beauchamp's Career ch. 39, p. 349. [R. BROS. '88.]

2. In a telescope or microscope, the number of times that the length or any other linear dimension of a body observed is apparently multiplied when seen through the instrument: in microscopy implying also increase of penetration. Called also magnifying power. 3. The act of extolling or glorifying. [< LL. magnificatio(n-), < L. magnifico; see MAGNIFY.]

mag-nif′i-ca-tiv(e, mag-nif′i-ca-tiv. I. a. Tending to magnify. II. n. Gram. A word that, by formation or use, is expressive of increased, unusual, or considerable size: opposed to diminutive.

mag-nif′i-cence, mag-nif′i-sens, n. 1. The state or quality of being magnificent; the exhibition of greatness of action, character, intellect, wealth, or power; brilliant or imposing appearance; display of grandeur; splendor.

The old Egyptians have left behind them monuments of industry and power, before which all European magnificence is confessed to fade away. JOHNSON Rasselas ch. 30, p. 95. [S. M. '80.]

2. A title of courtesy in ancient Rome: applied also to high university officials in Germany. 3†. Munificence. [F., < L. magnificentia, < magnificus; see MAGNIFIC.]

mag-nif′i-cen-cy†, n. 1. Magnificence. 2. A magnificent thing.

mag-nif′i-cent, mag-nif′i-sent, a. 1. Grand or majestic in appearance, quality, character, or action; splendid; extremely fine or good; befitting the great, as in deeds, manners, or surroundings; great in effect, promise, or import; as, a magnificent prospect, pearl, heroism, plan, etc.

These considerations are apt to make one entertain a magnificent idea of the British spirit and love of liberty.
HUME Essays, On British Gov't p. 32. [W. L. & CO.]

2. Exhibiting magnificence; characterized by splendor; luxuriously fine; as, a magnificent style of living. [< L. magnificent-, compar. stem of magnificus; see MAGNIFIC.] — mag-nif′i-cent-ly, adv.

Synonyms: see GORGEOUS; GRAND; IMPERIAL; KINGLY.

mag-nif′i-co, mag-nif′i-cō, n. [It.] 1. A noble of the Venetian republic: an old title of courtesy. 2. A lordly personage; one who affects state or splendor.

mag′ni-fi″er, mag′ni-fāi″ər, n. One who or that which magnifies; specifically, a magnifying optical instrument.

Bigotry and national aversion are powerful magnifiers of every object of dispute. GIBBON Rome vol. vi, ch. 60, p. 51. [P. S. & CO.]

mag′ni-fy, mag′ni-fāi, vt. [-FIED; -FY′ING.] 1. To increase the apparent size of; cause to subtend a larger visual angle, as by means of a microscope. 2. To exalt in description or praise; extol; glorify. 3. To cause to seem greater or more important in any way; give or have an extravagant notion of; exaggerate; as, to magnify difficulties.

People who are engaged in any party, or have advised any measures, are apt to magnify the numbers of those they would have understood as approving their measures.
B. FRANKLIN Autobiography vol. ii, ch. 4, p. 140. [L. '84.]

4. To increase the magnitude of; enlarge. [< F. magnifier, < L. magnifico, < magnus, great; and see -FY.]

Synonyms: see AGGRAVATE; INCREASE; PRAISE.

—mag′ni-fy″ing-glass″, n. A convex lens that operates to increase the apparent size of any object viewed through it.— to magnify oneself (Script.), to manifest a spirit of haughtiness.— to m. oneself against (Script.), to treat disdainfully or with pride.

mag-nil′o-quent, mag-nil′o-cwənt, a. Characterized by magniloquence; hence, vainglorious.

He [Caius] wrote most magniloquent letters to Rome.
KEIGHTLEY Roman Empire pt. i, ch. 4, p. 73. [H. G. & CO. '41.]

— mag-nil′o-quence, n. [Rare.] Pompous or bombastic style; grandiloquence. mag-nil′o-quy‡.— mag-nil′o-quent-ly, adv.

mag-nip′o-tence, mag-nip′o-tens, n. [Rare.] Strength to do great things; great power.

To stretch the languid bulk and thew
Of love's fresh-born magnipotence.
PATMORE Angel in the House, Betrothal, The Lover st. 2.

mag′ni-tude, mag′ni-tūd, n. 1. Great or uncommon size or extent; greatness; vastness; hence, grandeur; importance. 2. That which is conceived of as measurable. (1) Something of measurable extent, as a line, a surface, or a solid. Called also a geometric magnitude. (2) Any physical quantity that admits of measurement: properly only directed or vector quantities, as velocity or force. 3. The property of having size; amount of measurable extent; real or apparent size.

Of absolute magnitude we can frame no conceptions. All magnitudes as known to us are thought of as equal to, greater than, or less than, certain other magnitudes. SPENCER Principles of Psychol. vol. ii, pt. vi, ch. 13, p. 173. [A. '90.]

4. Astron. The brightness of a star expressed on a scale in which the brightest are numbered one, and the faintest visible to the naked eye six. 5. Largeness in respect to relation, influence, or effect; consequence; as, the magnitude of the crisis alarmed him.

Some crimes, by their magnitude, have a touch of the sublime.
CHANNING Works, Annex. of Texas p. 759. [A. U. A. '83.]

6. Pros. The length of a foot or syllable expressed in terms of the metrical unit. [< L. magnitudo, < magnus, great.]

Synonyms: bigness, bulk, dimension, extent, greatness, hugeness, immensity, largeness, size, vastness.—Antonyms: diminutiveness, littleness, pettiness, slightness, smallness.

—apparent magnitude, the angle, linear or solid, subtended by a line, surface, or body, as seen from some point.

Mag-no″li-a, mag-nō′li-ə, n. Bot. 1. A genus of highly ornamental trees or shrubs of the magnolia family (Magnoliaceæ), with evergreen or deciduous leaves and large handsome flowers. There are about 15 species, natives of North America and subtropical Asia. M. glauca is the fragrant sweet-bay, white bay, or laurel-magnolia; M. acuminata, the cucumber-tree or mountain-magnolia; M. Umbrella, the umbrella-tree; M. macrophylla, the great-leaved magnolia, etc. Many large-flowered Japanese species are in cultivation. 2. [m-] A plant of this genus. [< Magnol, a French botanist.]

a, the fruit, with seeds hanging by an extensile thread.

Mag-no″li-a′ce-æ, mag-nō″li-ē′sē-ī or -g′ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. An order of polypetalous trees or shrubs — the magnolia family — often aromatic, with alternate undivided feather-veined leaves, and large solitary axillary or terminal flowers with calyx and corolla colored alike, in 3 or more rows of 3 each. It embraces 4 tribes, 13 genera, and about 85 species. [< MAGNOLIA.]

mag-nop′er-ate†, vt. To cause to increase.

mag′no-phone, n. Same as MICROPHONE.

mag″no-sel-la′ri-an, mag″no-sel-ē′ri-ən, a. Conch. Having large sutural saddles, as certain ammonites. [< L. magnus, great, + sella, saddle.]

mag′num, mag′num, n. 1. A wine-bottle of twice the ordinary size; also, the quantity such a bottle will hold. 2. [MAG′NA, pl.] The largest bone of the wrist; the os magnum. [L., neut. s. of magnus, great.]

mag′ot, mag′ət, C.[1] E. I. W. Wr. (ma-gō′, C.[2]), n. [F.] 1. Art. A Chinese or Japanese grotesque figure in porcelain, faience, bronze, wood, or ivory. 2. A Flemish genre picture: applied in contempt by Louis XIV. 3. The Barbary ape.

mag′pie, mag′pāi, n. 1. A garruline corvoid bird of Pica or a related genus, having a very long and graduated tail. The common European magpie (P. pica or caudata) has iridescent black plumage with the scapulars, belly, sides, flanks, and inner web of the flight-feathers white. It is often tamed and taught to speak, and is noted for its thievishness. The magpie of western North America is a variety (hudsonica). P. nuttalli is the yellow-billed magpie of California. Cyanopolius cooki is the Spanish blue magpie; a similar species (C. cyanus) is found in Asia.

The American Magpie (Pica pica, var. hudsonica).[1/18]
a, the nest, of sticks, partly enclosed and showing structure. [1/30]

2. [Austral.] A crow-shrike resembling a magpie; as, the Australian magpie (Orœaca cristata). 3. A strain of the domestic pigeon bred to the coloration of a magpie. 4. [Slang, Eng.] Mil. In rifle-shooting at a target with four divisions, a shot that strikes in a division next to the outside ring: so called from being signaled by a black-and-white disk. 5. [Slang, Eng.] A bishop: so called from his black-and-white robes. 6. [Slang, Eng.] A halfpenny. Called also mag. [< Mag (for Magot, < F. Margot, for Marguerite, Margaret, < L. margarita, pearl, < Gr. margaritēs, < margaros, pearl-oyster; cp. Per. murwari, pearl) + PIE, the bird.]
mag′got-pie″†; mag′got-y-pie″†; mag′ot-pie″†.
—mag′pie-di″ver, n. [Local, Brit.] The smew.— m.-finch, n. A spotted seed-eating apermestine bird of the genus Spermestes, of Africa and Madagascar.— m.-goose, n. The Australian swan-goose.— m.-lark, n. An Australian prionopoid bird (Grallina picata), mostly blue-black above and white below, with the tail wholly and the wings partly white.— m.-maki, n. The ruffed lemur (Lemur macaco).— m.-moth, n. The gooseberry-moth, of pied coloration.— m.-perch, n. [Tasmania.] A cirrituid fish (Chilodactylus vizenarius).— m.-robin, n. A dayal.— m.-shrike, n. 1. A tanagrine bird (Cissopis leverianus) of northern South America, closely resembling a magpie in colors and form. 2. The magpie-lark.

mag′ra, mag′rə, n. [Austral.] A contrivance in which aboriginal mothers carry their infants on their backs.

mags′man, magz′mən, n. [Slang, Eng.] A street swindler; confidence-man.

ma-gua′ri, mə-gwä′ri, C. (mg′gwə-ri′, W.), n. [S. Am.] A South-American stork or ciconiine bird (Euxenura maguari), white, with a black forked tail.

ma-guey′, mə-gwē′, C. I.[1] (mag′wē, E. I.[2] W.), n. The American aloe (Agave Americana). See illus. under CENTURY-PLANT. [< Mex. maguei.] ma-guay′†.

Ma′gus, mē′gus or mg′gus, n. Singular of MAGI.

Mag-yar′, maj-är′, C., or med′yer′, W.[2] (mag′yär, E. I. W.[1]; mad′yär, S.; -jär. Wr.), n. [Hung.] 1. A member of the Hungarian race that appeared in Europe in 884. The Magyars are believed to be of Turanian blood, and are probably descendants of the ancient Scythians. 2. The language of the Magyars, belonging to the Ugric branch of the Finnic class of Uralo-Altaic languages; Hungarian.
—Mag-yar′, a. Of or pertaining to the Magyars.

mag′y-da-re†, n. Laserwort.

Ma″ha-bha′ra-ta, mg′hä-bä′rə-tə, n. [Sans.] An ancient Hindu epic or collection of poems of 110,000 couplets, reciting the dynastic wars of the Pandava and Kaurava of northern India, with extensive interpolations of legendary religious, moral, and scientific dissertations: supposed to date from 500 B. C., and ascribed with the Puranas and Vedas to the mythic author Vyāsa. Ma″ho-bha′ra-tam‡.

Ma″ha-de′va, mg′hä-dē′və, n. [Sans.] Hind. Myth. The great god; Siva: his title as he is worshiped by the Saivas.

Ma″ha-de′vi, mg′hä-dē′vi, n. [Sans.] Hind. Myth. Durga or Parvati, the wife of Siva.

ma″ha-kal′pa, mg′hä-kgl′pə, n. [Sans.] Hind. Myth. A great kalpa: the unit by which past and future time is said to be computed by the Indian gods.

ma′ha-leb, mä′hə-leb, C. (mə-hä′leb, I. W.; mē′ha-leb, Wr.), n. A European cherry-tree (Prunus or Cerasus Mahaleb), or its fruit. Walking-sticks and stems for tobacco-pipes are made from the young shoots, and a perfume is extracted from the flowers and leaves. [< Ar. mahleb.] ma′ha-ly, mä′hə-li, n. [Am. Ind.] A female salmon.

ma″ha-ra′ja, } mg′hä-rä′jə, n. 1. A great Hindu ma″ha-ra′jah, } prince: the title of some native rulers; as, the maharaja Sindia; the maharajahs of Indore and Travancore. 2. A prominent religious teacher of

ma′ha-seer, mä′hä-sīr, n. A fish, the mahsīr.

Ma′hat, mä hut, n. [Sans.] The great one, or intelligence; the first production of nature, according to the Hindu Sānkhya philosophy, itself productive of other principles. Called also Buddhi.

The first product of Pradhāna . . . is, both according to the Sānkhya and Pauranik doctrines, the principle called Mahat, literally 'the Great,' explained in other places, as . . . the production of the manifestation of the qualities. Vishnu Purana tr. by Wilson, vol. i, bk. i, ch. 2, p. 29, note. [TR. & CO. '64.]

ma-hat′ma, mä-hät′mä, n. [Sans.] In Brahmanism, an adept of the highest order; literally, great-souled one: properly a title of respect.

Now it is declared to be a fact that a community of Buddhist 'Brothers' called Mahâtmas, are living at this moment in the deserts of Tibet.

MONIER WILLIAMS Buddhism lect. x, p. 248. [J. M. '89.]

mah′bub, mä′bub, n. A silver coin of Tripoli. See COIN.

Mah′di, mä′di, n. The Mohammedan Messiah; the last of the Imams, whom the Mohammedans believe will reign in the last days, temporally and spiritually, and convert the world to Islam. The Shiahs believe that the Mahdi has lived; certain sects of them say that he is hiding and will reappear; but the Sunnis believe that he is yet to appear. Many have claimed to be the Mahdi, especially Mohammed Ahmed (1843–'85), who raised an insurrection in the Egyptian Sudan in 1883. Mah′dee‡; Meh′dee‡.

According to Mahommedan tradition, the true Mahdi, that is, 'the Guided-rected,' . . . was to make his appearance in the thirteen-hundredth year of the Hegira, namely, 1883.

Gordon and The Mahdi ch. 5, p. 25. [VIZ. '85.]

[< Ar. mahdī, leader, < ma- (formative) + ehdī, guide.]

—Mah′da-vi, n. One who believes that the Mahdi has appeared and is in hiding. Mah′di-an.—Mah′dism, n. The belief in the Mahdi. Mah′di-ism;—Mah′dist, n. 1. A Mahdavi. 2. A follower of a Mahdi, especially of the Egyptian Mahdi.

Ma-her′ni-a, ma-her′ni-ą, n. Bot. A genus of South-African shrubby herbs of the cola-nut family (Sterculiaceæ), often grown in greenhouses for the profusion of their fragrant red, violet, or yellow nodding flowers. M. inflorata is the best-known species. [Transposition of Hermannia, < Paul Hermann, botanist.]

mahl′stick″, mâl′stic″, mōl′-, n. Art. A staff, one maul′stick″, yard or more long, with a leather or wooden ball at one end, used by painters to support and steady the right hand while using the brush. It is held in the left hand, with the palette and brushes, while the ball rests lightly against the frame or canvas. [< G. mahlstock, < malden, malen, paint, + stock, stick.]

mah′mal, mä′mal, n. [Egypt.] A richly ornamented litter with a pyramidal top, borne on a camel as an emblem of royalty in the annual pilgrimages from Cairo or Damascus to Mecca. mah′mil‡.

ma′hoe, mä hō, W. mä hō, C., n. 1. Any one of various tropical trees, chiefly of the genus Hibiscus; especially, H. tiliaceus and H. elatus. 2. The bast of any of these trees, used for cordage, etc.

ma-hog′a-nize, ma-heg′ą-nāiz, vt. [-NIZED; -NI′ZING.] To stain or grain in imitation of mahogany.

ma-hog′a-ny, ma-heg′ą-ni, n. [-NIES, pl.] 1. A large tropical American tree (Swietenia Mahogoni) of the bead-tree family (Meliaceæ). 2. Any one of various trees yielding a wood similar to the true mahogany. 3. The hard, fine-grained, reddish or yellowish-brown wood of Swietenia Mahogoni, much used for cabinet-work. Called also Madeira-wood.

The Mahogany (Swietenia Mahogoni). a, the flower. b, partly open fruit.

The mahogany that comes from the West Indies is called Spanish mahogany, and includes the finer-grained and handsomer varieties of the wood; that from Central America is called Honduras mahogany or bay-wood; and that from Mexico, Mexican mahogany. Among the varieties of the wood sought by cabinet-makers, etc., are curl-wood or curly mahogany (marked with little oval knots of a different shade from the body-wood), caterpillar or crotch-curl m. (marked with whitish lines or passage sprigs), bastard m. (marked with shades of color producing the effect of festoons and wreaths), veiny m. (marked with longitudinal veins), scattered m. (marked with transverse wave-lines).

4. A table, especially a dining-table, made of mahogany. 5. A drink made of gin and molasses. [< S. Am. mahogoni.]

Phrases, etc.: —African or Senegal mahogany, Khaya senegalensis, of the bead-tree family. —Australian m., the jarrah. —bastard m. 1. W. Ind. Maytenus or Ilicioides apetala, of the soapberry family (Sapindaceæ). Called bastard locust in Jamaica. 2. [Austral.] The jarrah. —Indian m., the red-wood-tree (Soymida febrifuga of the Coromandel coast, the toon-tree (Cedrela Toona), and the chittagong-wood (Chickrassia tabularis), all three of the bead-tree family. —Madeira m., same as CANARY-WOOD. —ma-hog′a-ny-birch″, n. The black birch (Betula lenta). —m. color, n. A reddish or yellowish brown. Called also mahogany-brown. —m. gum, n. The jarrah. m. gum tree; m. pine, n. Same as JARRAH. —m. tree, n. 1. The Swietenia Mahogoni, or any other species of mahogany. See illus. above. 2. A mahogany table, especially a dinner-table.

ma-ho′li, ma-hō′li, n. [S. Afr.] A large-eared long-leaping lemuroid (Galago maholi), of Central Africa.

Ma-hom′ed-an, Ma-hom′et-an, etc. Same as MOHAMMEDAN, etc.; formerly the common forms. [< F. Mahométan, < LL. Mahomet, Mohammed, < Ar. Muhammad, Mohammed.]

—Ma-hom′ed-an-ism, Ma-hom′et-an-ism, n. Ma-hom′et-ist, ma-hom′et-ist, n. Rare. A Mohammedan. Ma-hom′ter+. —Ma-hom′et-ism, n. Mohammedanism. Ma-hom′et-ry‡.

ma-hone′, ma-hōn′, n. A large Turkish vessel. [< F. mahonne, < Turk maghana, barge.] ma-hon′net+.

Ma-ho′ni-a, ma-hō′ni-ą, n. Bot. A genus of evergreen shrubs, now usually included in Berberis. An Oregon species (M. or B. Aquifolium) with blue acid berries is often cultivated. [< Bernard M'Mahon, a patron of botany.]

ma-hoo′hoo, ma-hū′hū, n. [Afr.] The square-mouthed rhinoceros (Rhinoceros simus).

Ma′ho-ri, n. Same as MAORI.

Ma-hound′, ma-haund′ or mā′haund, n. 1. [Archaic.] Satan; an evil spirit.

What shape is that, so very grim, and black as any coal!

			Pampean.	Abipones, Araucanians, Calchiquis, Patagonians, Yahgans.

[1] Another classification divides these into (1) True Negroes, including Nubians (classified above with the Negroid), Nigritians (including generally the Nilotic and Sudanese), Senegambians, and Guineans, and (2) Mixed Negroes, including Fan, Fula, Tibbu, and Masai. [2] Another classification includes all the Negritic groups, with the Australian, in a variety of the Negroid race called Oceanic Negroid. [3] The Interoceanic race excludes those groups classified as Negroid. See previous reference. [4] Sometimes divided as Ural-Altaic, including the first four groups, Coreo-Japanese, the sixth group, and Asiatic-Hyperborean, the fifth. [5] See also table of linguistic stocks, under American. [6] Sometimes classed as Hamitic or as Hamito-Semitic. [7] Sometimes classed as Asian or made a separate race. [8] The yellow Asian, the Malayic, and the American races are sometimes classed together as Mongoloid. [9] For linguistic classification, see language.

II. Classification Based on the Character of the Hair, as Prepared by the Smithsonian Institution.

Ulotriches (Woolly).	Lophocomi (in Tufts).	I. Papuans, Homo Papua.	1. Negritos.
			2. Papuans.
			3. Melanese.
			4. Tasmanians.
		II. Hottentots, Homo Hottentotus.	5. Hottentots.
			6. Bushmen.
	Eriocomi (Fleecy).	III. Kafirs, Homo Kafer.	7. Zulu Kafirs.
			8. Bechuanas.
			9. Congo Kafirs.
		IV. Negroes, Homo Niger.	10. Tibboo Negroes.
			11. Sudan Negroes.
			12. Senegambians.
			13. Nigritians.
Lissotriches (Smooth).	Euthycomi (Straight).	V. Australians, Homo Australis.	14. North-Australians.
			15. South-Australians.
		VI. Malayans, Homo Malayus.	16. Sundanese.
			17. Polynesians.

man, n. [MEN, pl.] 1. A rational animal of the genus Homo; a human being; an individual of the human race, as distinguished from a beast; in zoology, a primate mammal (Homo sapiens) representing a special family, Hominidæ, having the brain and brain-case relatively large as compared with the face, the body erect in locomotion, and the great toe not opposable. See HUMAN KINGDOM; plate of RACES OF MANKIND.

Man, according to Mivart, shares with the animal (1) the functions of animal life and instinct, (2) a power of sensation and of faint reproduction of sensations in imagination [fantasy], sensuous memory and dim sense-perceptions, (3) a power of organic inference, (4) appetites, sensuous emotions, and emotional language, and (5) organic volition. He is distinguished from the mere animal by (1) abstraction, (2) intellectual perception, (3) self-consciousness, (4) reflection, (5) intellectual [rational] memory, (6) judgment, (7) intellectual synthesis and induction, (8) ratiocination, (9) intellectual intuition, (10) higher (or intellectual) emotions or sentiments, (11) rational language, and (12) a true power of will. See MIVART Philosophical Catechism § 4, p. 22.

In truth, though the ethnologist does regard man as an animal, he must never lose sight of the fact that that animal is man.
D. WILSON Prehistoric Man ch. 23, p. 575. [MACM. '65.]

First of all we can demonstrate an ape from every strip of hide. . . . Indeed, the distinctions between man and the ape reach so far, that almost every fragment suffices for a diagnosis.
VIRCHOW Transact. Victoria Institute vol. xxiv, p. 202.

2. The human race; human beings collectively or in general; mankind; as, the interests or rights of man. 3. An adult male of the human kind; one who has attained full growth, or passed the age of puberty, or come to years of discretion, or reached his legal majority: distinguished from woman, boy, and youth.

Man is used adjectively, meaning 'adult male,' in such phrases as man milliner, man servant, often erroneously written as compounds (man-servant, etc.).

The man was no more than the boy writ large, with an extensive commentary. GEORGE ELIOT Felix Holt ch. 8, p. 128. [H.]

4. The male part of the race collectively or in general. 5. A male person who possesses the qualities or virtues appropriate to the stronger sex, a manly person.

mar'ble, n. 1. A stone composed mainly of calcium carbonate or of calcium and magnesium carbonates, of such color and texture as to be of value for building or for ornament.

In color marbles range from pure white through all shades of gray to black. Yellow, pink, red, violet, drab, and green are also common. The grays and blacks are due to carbonaceous matter, the others mainly to iron oxids. Color and susceptibility to high polish are the chief essentials. Rocks of this nature are more or less metamorphosed limestones.

Marble is variously distinguished by special names: (1) from its structural features or resemblances; as, bird's-eye marble, black-and-gold m., brocatelle-m. (resembling coarse tapestry), calico-m., forest-m., landscape-m., madrepore-m., ruin-m., saccharoidal m. (having a texture like that of loaf sugar), serpentine-m., shell-m., statuary-m.; (2) from the locality whence it is derived; as, Carrara m., Numidian m., Parian m. (one of the most famous of ancient statuary-marbles), Siena m., Tennessee m.; or (3) from its use; as, statuary-m. (white saccharoidal).

2. A sculptured or inscribed piece of this stone: usually in the plural; as, the Arundelian marbles.

Collections of marbles are named (1) from their collectors or donors; as, the Elgin marbles (obtained chiefly from the Parthenon by Lord Elgin in 1801 and now in the British Museum; (2) from the spot where they were found; as, the Æginetan m. (see illus. under ÆGINETAN), Pergamene m. (now in Berlin). See PERGAMENE.

3. A little ball made of this stone or other hard substance, as baked clay, glass, or porcelain, used in play. 4. pl. A boys' game played with such balls. 5. Same as MARVER. mar'bel‡. 6. A printers' imposing-stone. Mars, märz, n. 1. The fourth planet in the order of distance from the sun, and next outside the earth in orbit. Symbol ♂.

Mars resembles the earth more closely than any other planet, and it is apparently subject to similar weather-conditions and changes of seasons. Its year is 687 terrestrial days, and its day 24 hours, 37 minutes, 23 seconds. Its diameter is a trifle more than half that of the earth, and its surface a little more than one-quarter. Its surface, which has been mapped, is sometimes supposed to be more than half land of a prevailing red tint, excepting at the poles, which are white, as if covered with snow, and is marked by peculiar canals or straits. Mars has two moons, Deimos and Phobos, revolving in 8 and 30 hours respectively. Its mean distance from the sun is more than 141,000,000 miles.

Among the superior planets, Mars is the only one that exhibits a marked phase, which resembles that of the gibbous Moon.

mar'tyr, mär'tėr, vt. 1. To punish with death on account of religious belief, especially because of one's Christian faith; put to death because of one's maintenance or advocacy of some cause; as, he martyred the saints; our martyred president.

There may be those who are able to imagine that men who have been literally martyred in this cause have faced their death for the sake of the paltry coppers they collected to keep body and soul together. WM. BOOTH Darkest England pt. ii, p. 250. [F. & W. '91.]

2. To pursue with cruelty; put in grievous distress; also, to treat in a way that unwittingly tends to injury or death.

Her father, as it proved, had martyred his poor child to an inordinate desire for measuring his land by miles instead of acres. HAWTHORNE House of Seven Gables ch. 13, p. 225. [T. & F. '51.]

3†. To slay. [< OF. martirer, < martir, martyr, < LL. martyr; see MARTYR, n.]

mar'tyr, n. 1. One who testifies with his blood to his faith; one who submits to death rather than forswear his religion; specifically, one of the early Christians who suffered death for their religion.

We fancy that, if the days of persecution were to return, we should be able to display the courage of the martyrs, though at present our faith is cooled almost to indifference. WIBERAN Sermons on Moral Subjects ser. viii, p. 147. [D. & J. S.]

2. One who dies or suffers for principle, or sacrifices all for a cause; as, a martyr to the pursuit of gain.

The martyrs of literature who pursued their path through hopeless poverty to ends of the highest value to mankind, have been scarcely less memorable than those of religion. LECKY Eng. in the Eighteenth Cent. vol. i, ch. 3, p. 497. [A. '83.]

3. One who suffers much or long, as from misfortune or ill health; as, a martyr to rheumatism. 4. A wooden box with perforated bottom, used in grape-pressing. 5. An instrument of torture by pressure, formerly used. [< AS. martyr, < LL. martyr, < Gr. martyr, witness.]

—mar'tyr-ess, n.— mar'tyr-ly†, a.

mar'tyr-dom, mär'tėr-dum, n. 1. The condition or fate of a martyr; submission to death or persecution for the sake of faith or principle. 2. Protracted or extreme suffering; grievous affliction; distress; torment; as, this suspense is martyrdom. 3†. Slaughter. [< AS. martyrdōm, < martyr (see MARTYR, n.) + dōm, condition.]

mar'tyre†; mar'tyr-ship‡.

mar'tyr-ize, mär'tėr-aiz, v. [-IZED; -IZING.] I. t. To subject to martyrdom; make a martyr of.

It is a grievous mistake to suppose that the study of natural science martyrizes the more ethereal faculties of the soul. YOUMANS Hand-Book of Household Science intro., p. 16. [A. '57.]

Mas'o-rite, mas'o-rait, n. One of the Jewish writers who assisted in the compilation of the Masora.

The Masorites . . . were the first who distinguished the books and sections of books into verses. T. H. HORNE Intro. to the Bible vol. ii, pt. i, ch. 4, p. 144. [L. & G. '68.]

This great enterprise was due to a body of trained scholars, who were called the Massoretes, or 'possessors of the tradition.' ISAAC TAYLOR The Alphabet vol. i, ch. 5, p. 282. [K. P. & CO. '83.]

Mas'o-ret or -rete‡; Mas'so-rete or -rite‡.

masque, v. & n. Same as MASK.

mas"quer-ade', mas'kgr-ēd', v. [-A'DED; -A'DING.] I. t. [Rare.] To cover up or conceal as with a mask; as, to masquerade vice.

II. i. 1. To take part in a masquerade, or wear a mask or disguise. 2. Figuratively, to assume a disguise; appear or attempt to appear in a character other than one's own; as, he masquerades as a millionaire.

Surely no system should be held accountable for what another may have done, masquerading in its name. STORRS Divine Origin Christianity lect. vii, p. 213. [RAN. & S. '84.]

mas"quer-ade', n. 1. A social party composed of persons masked and costumed so as to be disguised: usually a dancing-party.

But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
GOLDSMITH Deserted Village l. 259.

2. A false showing; concealment by false pretenses; disguise; as, a politician's masquerade of greed. 3. The costume of a masquerader.

A seaman in a savage masquerade.
BYRON The Island can. 2, st. 20.

4. A changeable silk. 5. A sham battle of mounted men, peculiar to Spain. 6. A form of dramatic representation formerly in vogue. See MASK, n. [F., < Sp. mascarada, < máscara; see MASK, n.] mas"quer-a'der, mas'kgr-ē'dgr, n. A person who masks or engages in masquerades; also, a person or thing that appears in any disguise.

mas'rite, mas'rait, n. Mineral. A fibrous, hydrous aluminum-iron sulfate, containing also manganese, cobalt, and masrium oxids: discovered in Egypt in 1890.

mas'ri-um, mas'ri-um, n. Chem. An element announced in 1891 as having been discovered in the mineral masrite. The symbol is Ms, its atomic weight near 228, but as yet it is known only through its salts. [< Ar. Mas, Egypt (?).]

mass¹, mȧs, v. I. t. To form or gather into a mass; collect into close relation; bring together; as, to mass one's forces.

It may be stated as a rule, that small flowers should never be massed together. PETER HENDERSON Practical Floriculture ch. 26, p. 181. [O. J. CO. '87.]

II. i. To collect or come together in masses; as, the soldiers massed at the fork of the road.

Synonyms: see CONCENTRATE.

mass², vi. [Rare.] 1. To celebrate mass. 2. To attend mass.

mass¹, n. 1. An assemblage of things that collectively make one quantity; a collection of homogeneous particles or objects; as, a mass of water, earth, or rubbish.

It is much easier to govern great masses of men through their imagination than through their reason.
LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, ch. 4, p. 267. [A. '73.]

2. An aggregation of matter into one coherent whole: a body of concrete matter; a lump; as, a mass of stone.

Till very lately no one even entertained the idea that that continent [Greenland] was buried under one continuous mass of ice, with scarcely a mountain-top rising above the icy mantle.
JAMES CROLL Climate and Time ch. 23, p. 377. [A. '75.]

3. The principal part of anything; greater portion; as, the mass of the audience. 4. Extent of volume; bulkiness; size; also, sum; as, the mountain's mass. 5. Physics. The measure or expression of quantity of matter in a body as indicated either by its weight or by the amount of force necessary to produce a given amount of motion in the body in a given time.

Mass and weight are confounded by many because weight is an indication of mass. They are distinct in meaning, mass being that quality which is the condition of inertia. The mass of a body is not altered by taking it from one place to another where the intensity of gravity is different, as from the equator to the poles; its weight is altered by so doing. Compare WEIGHT.

The mass of the sun is about one fourth greater than that of a globe of water the same size.
C. A. YOUNG The Sun intro., p. 17. [A. '81.]

Synonyms: aggregate, body, bulk, heap, lump, matter, substance, total, totality, whole. See AGGREGATE; COLLECTION; HEAP; HOST.

mass², n. 1. The celebration of the eucharist or Lord's Supper as a sacrament instituted by Christ and as a sacrifice presenting the true body and blood of Christ under the appearance of bread and wine; the holy communion and its celebration: the name used in the Roman Catholic Church. The word was retained in the first Prayer-book of the Church of England (1549), but excluded from the second (1552); and its use has been recently revived by some High-church Anglicans.

A mass amongst Christian men best begins a busy morning.
SCOTT Ivanhoe ch. 32, p. 265. [P. & C.]

2. A service that includes the holy communion and its liturgy; the office for celebration of the eucharist or Lord's Supper. 3. A feast-day or festival in Christian churches: used only in composition; as, Christ*mas*, Martin*mas*, Michael*mas*, etc. 4. Mus. A musical service consisting of five or more parts of the liturgy, usually rendered in connection with the mass. The parts are usually the Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, and sometimes include an offertorium.

We want a people's Mass, one that they can sing with heart and soul. The Church Times [London] Oct. 9, '91, p. 953, col. 4.

mas'sa-cre, mas'ȧ-kgr, vt. [-CRED; -CRING.] To kill with indiscriminate violence, with attendant circumstances of cruelty, and in a manner contrary to the usages of civilization: said especially where the victims are human beings, incapable of much resistance, and considerable in numbers; as, all the captives were massacred.

Synonyms: see KILL.

—mas'sa-crer, n.—mas'sa-croust, a. Pertaining to massacre.

mas'sa-cre, n. 1. The unnecessary and indiscriminate killing of human beings, without due process of civil or military law, as for revenge or in savage warfare, and especially where much resistance is impossible; wholesale murder; as, the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day. 2. By extension, the reckless slaughter of a great number of animals; as, the massacre of buffaloes. 3. Her. A bearing consisting of deer's antlers with a portion of the skull attached. [F., < LG. matsken, hew.]

Synonyms: butchery, carnage, havoc, slaughter. A massacre is the indiscriminate killing in numbers of the unresisting or defenseless; butchery is the killing of men rudely and ruthlessly as cattle are killed in the shambles. Havoc may not be so complete as massacre, nor so coldly brutal as butchery, but is more widely spread and furious; it is destruction let loose, and may be applied to organizations, interests, etc., as well as to human life: "as for Saul, he made havock of the church," Acts viii, 3. Carnage (Latin caro, carnis, flesh) refers to widely scattered or heaped up corpses of the slain; slaughter is similar in meaning, but refers more to the process, as carnage does to the result; these two words only of the group may be used of great destruction of life in open and honorable battle, as when we say the enemy was repulsed with great slaughter, or the carnage was terrible.

—massacre of the innocents (Script. Hist.), the massacre of the children of Bethlehem. Matt ii, 16.

mas″sage′, mgs-säzh′, vt. [-SAGED′; -SA′GING.] Therap. To subject to manipulation or intermittent stress, pressure, kneading, slapping, rubbing, etc., as the muscles or other parts of the body; as, to massage a patient.

ma'ter, mē'tgr or mg'tgr, n. [MA'TRES, mē'trīz or mg'trēz, pl.] 1. Mother: used in numerous Latin phrases. 2. Anat. One of two membranes of the brain, the dura mater and the pia mater: so called because they were supposed to originate the brain. [L., mother.]

—ma'ter dol″o-ro'sa (Art), the Virgin Mary represented as the sorrowing mother, sometimes with one sword, sometimes with seven swords in her heart, in allusion to the seven sorrows she endured (Luke ii, 35).—ma″ter-fa-mil'i-as, n. The mother of a family.

mat'ere', n. Matter, subject; business.

ma-te'ri-al', v. To produce from material; materialize.

ma-te'ri-al, mg-ti'ri-gl, a. 1. Of or pertaining to matter; formed or composed of matter; having a corporeal existence; physical; as, a material substance.

We cannot think of substance save in terms that imply material properties. SPENCER Principles of Psychol. vol. i, pt. ii, ch. 1, p. 162. [A. '82.]

2. Pertaining to matter in a corporeal relation. (1) Touching things of corporeal interest; affecting the physical nature; as, there is a material cause for ill health. (2) Pertaining to the body or the appetites; corporeal; sensual; as, the material pleasures of life.

His gross material soul at once could find Somewhat in her exceeding all her kind.
DRYDEN Cymon and Iphigenia l. 135.

3. Partaking as if of the substantiality of matter; pertaining to the subject-matter; having value or importance; of much consequence; weighty; essential; as, a material aid to study; material evidence.

There exists a material difference between a soldier and a butcher, though killing be a business common to both.
COOPER Lionel Lincoln ch. 1, p. 125. [W. A. T. '60.]

4. Philos. & Logic. Pertaining to matter as opposed to form; relating to the common or undifferentiated in thought or in being; pertaining to objects as merely things, or to the individual as opposed to the general; as, a material cause; material fallacy. 5†. Replete with matter or good sense. [< LL. materialis. < L. materia, matter.] ma-te'ri-al‡; ma-te'ri-oust.

Synonyms: see IMPORTANT; PHYSICAL.

—material cause, see CAUSE. —m. fallacy, a fallacy in the matter or thought, rather than in the logical form. See FALLACY.

Material Fallacies are such as occur when there is no fault in the reasoning process, and the conclusion does follow from the premises. Hence called Material, because they lie not in the form, but the matter of the Syllogism.
L. H. ATWATER Elementary Logic ch. 6, p. 161. [L. '67.]

ma-te'ri-al, n. 1. That of which anything is composed or may be constructed; matter or its analogue considered as a component part of something; as, the material for making a chair; material for a sermon. 2. Specifically, the matter that forms or may form a component part of some material structure, as a machine or a building; often in the plural; as, a treatise on the strength of materials. ma-te'ri-all†.

In making their rude implements, the materials used by savages are what they find ready to hand, such as wood, stone, and bone, but they cannc extract metal from the ore, and therefore belong to the Stone Age. E. B. TYLOR Anthropol. p. 24. [A. '81.]

Material was rarely used till within the last hundred years. In the case of anything made up of a single substance, to speak of its materials was likely to mislead. It was this consideration . . . that gave us material.
FITZEDWARD HALL Modern English ch. 8, p. 306. [S. '73.]

—raw material, articles of commerce in a partially manufactured condition, or which may be used for or in the manufacture of other industrial products; as, logs are the raw material from which lumber is made, and lumber is a raw material used in house-building.

ma-te'ri-al-ism, mg-ti'ri-gl-izm, n. 1. The denial of any immaterial part in man, or in the universe outside of man, or in both these; in philosophy, the theory of cosmology that accounts for the universe, embracing man and the systems of nature and the supernatural, by matter alone, or by matter and motion, or by matter, motion, and force: opposed to spiritism.

Perfect materialism (matterism) affirms that there is but one substance in the universe, and that that substance is matter. Imperfect materialism may admit either (1) a spirit in man but none in the universe (no God), or (2) a spirit in the universe but none in man. The theories vary all the way from the crude form of Cabanis and Moleschott, that the brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile, up to what is scarcely distinguishable from spiritism. Compare SPIRITISM; SPIRITUALISM.

2. The tendency to have undue regard for material and present interests or comforts; devotion to bodily and material necessities or desires; as, materialism is observable in the modern politician. 3†. Material substance collectively; matter.

ma-te'ri-al-ist, mg-ti'ri-gl-ist, n. 1. A believer in the doctrine of materialism.

Buddhists are all materialists at bottom; what they call spirit is but a refined form of matter.
J. HAWTHORNE Professor's Sister ch. 2, p. 31. [B. C. & CO.]

2. One who takes interest only in the material or bodily necessities and comforts of life. ma-te″ri-a'ri-an†.

—ma-te'ri-al-ist, a. Of or pertaining to materialism; materialistic.—ma-te'ri-al-is'tic, a. Of the nature of or marked by materialism. ma-te″ri-al-is'tic-al‡.

ma-te″ri-al'i-ty, mg-ti'ri-al'i-ti, n. [-TIES, pl.] 1. The quality or state of being material; physical as distinguished from psychical nature; corporeity; also, a material existence; matter or body; a substance composed of matter; as, the soul is not a materiality. 2. The quality of being material or essential; importance; as, the evidence has great materiality.

ma-te'ri-al-ize, mg-ti'ri-gl-giz, v. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] I. t. 1. To endow with a bodily form or nature; invest with material characteristics; render perceptible by the bodily senses; as, an idea of Watt was materialized in the steam-engine. 2. To consider only under materialistic conceptions; regard as matter; reduce to matter; as, that philosophy materializes the Deity. 3. To render actual and observable; realize. 4. To cause to assume a character appropriate to material things; render material, common, coarse, immoral, or vulgar; as, he is materialized into a sot.

It is pleasant to see that in Germany, and even in this country, amidst the rude materializing pressure of the age, Homerology does not cease to flourish.
GLADSTONE Homeric Synchronism intro., p. 8. [H. '76.]

II. i. 1. [Colloq.] To take perceptible or substantial form; be developed into something tangible; be realized and come into observation; as, the expected success failed to materialize. 2. Spiritualism. To assume a material and bodily form; as, the spirits partially materialized. ma-te'ri-al-ise‡. —ma-te″ri-al-i-za'tion, ma-te″ri-al-i-sa'tion, n.

ma-te'ri-al-ly, mg-ti'ri-gl-i, adv. 1. In a material and important manner; to a considerable degree; as, our interests are materially affected. 2. In essence or substance as distinguished from non-essential form; as, that mode of action is materially wrong.

But as it does not materially affect our argument, we prefer, for simplicity's sake, to use throughout the popular mode of expression. SPENCER Universal Progress ch. 1, p. 43. [A. '64.]

3. In relation to a thing as bodily or material; from a physical point of view; as, to care materially for the blind.

ma-te'ri-a med'i-ca, mg-ti'ri-g or -tē'ri-g med'i-cg. Med. 1. The branch of medical science that relates to medicinal substances, their nature, sources, mode of administration, and effects upon the animal economy. 2. The substances employed as remedial agents. [L.; materia, matter; medica, f. s. of medicus; see MEDICAL.]

ma-te″ri-a'ri-an†, n. A materialist.

ma-te'ri-ate‡, va. 1. Consisting of matter; material; ma-te″ri-a'ted†, bodily. 2. Philos. United with matter; materialized; realized.—ma-te'ri-ate†, n. A material substance or object.—ma-te″ri-a'tion†, n.—ma-te'ri-a-ture†, n. Materialization.

ma-té″ri-el', mg-tē″ri-el'. C. (ma-tē″ri-el, E. Wr.; mg'tē″ri-ĕl', W.). n. [F.] Materials collectively; commonly used regarding military matters, and opposed to personnel; as, the matériel of an army (that is, all the horses, guns, baggage, ammunition, etc.).

ma-te'ri-es, mg-ti'ri-iz or -tē'ri-ēz, n. [L.] Material of which anything is made or formed, or which is regarded as peculiarly causative: only in technical use; as, the materies of cholera.

ma-ter'nal, mg-tgr'nal, a. 1. Pertaining or peculiar to a mother or to motherhood; experienced or felt by a mother; motherly; as, maternal pride.

Kant never spoke of her [his mother] to the end of his life without the utmost tenderness and acknowledgement of his great obligation to her maternal care. DE QUINCEY Narrative Papers, Kant in vol ii, p. 238. [T. & F. '56.]

2. Connected with or inherited from one's mother; coming through the relationship of a mother; as, he has the maternal temperament; a maternal grandfather. [< L. maternus, < mater, mother.]

—ma″ter-nal'i-ty, n. Motherhood.—ma-ter'-nal-ly, adv. After the manner of a mother, or through a mother; on the mother's side.

ma-ter'ni-ty, mg-tgr'ni-ti, n. [-TIES, pl.] 1. The condition of being a mother. 2. A hospital or portion of a hospital used for lying-in; a maternity hospital: from an adjective use. 3. [Rare.] Female ancestors. [< F. maternité, < LL. maternita(t-)s, < L. maternus; see MATERNAL.] mate'ship, mēt'ship, n. 1. The state of being a mate or companion. 2. The position or authority of one holding the office of a mate.

ma-te'te, ma-ti'te, n. [Afr.] A water-cane or reed. It grows 20 feet in height and 2 inches in diameter. ma-ti'te‡.

Like the enclosure round the palace courts and quarters, each avenue was fenced with tall matete (water cane) neatly set very close together in uniform rows. STANLEY Through the Dark Continent vol. i, ch. 9, p. 199. [H. '78.]

mat'fel-on†, n. The knapweed. mat'fel-lon†.

mat'-grass″, mat'-gras', n. Any one of several grasses adapted by their network of roots to bind together sandy soils, as beach-grass, of the Atlantic coasts of America and Europe, and two Old World grasses, sea lyme-grass and nard.

math, mgth, C. (math, I. W. Wr.), n. A mowing, or that obtained by mowing: now only in aftermath and lattermath.

It [the advertisement] announced that the after or latter math of the Severn Ham was to be sold by order of the trustees—172 acres, 2 roods, 28 perches of grass in all.
QUILLER-COUCH in Harper's Monthly July, '91, p. 274.

[< AS. mæth, < māwan, mow.]

math″e-mat'ic-al, math'g-mat'ic-gl, a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of mathematics; treating of quantities, as space, weight, and distance; as, mathematical science. 2. Based on or conformed to the principles of mathematics; demonstrably correct; rigidly exact; precise; as, mathematical conclusions.

He had a way of reducing all action to dry, hard, mathematical system, with very little poetry about it.
D. G. MITCHELL Reveries of a Bachelor, College p. 222. [S. '64.]

3. Used in or connected with the science of mathematics; as, mathematical instruments. 4†. Geometrical. 5†. Pertaining to astrology or magic. [< L. mathematicus, < Gr. mathēmatikos, < manthanō (√ math), learn.] math″e-mat'ic‡ [Rare].

—mathematical unity, the number one.

—math″e-mat'ic-al-ly, adv.—math″e-ma-ti'cian, n. 1. One who has a thorough knowledge of mathematics. 2†. An astrologer.—math″e-mat'i-cize, vt. & vi. To subject to mathematical treatment; perform mathematical calculations.—math″e-mat″i-co-log'ic-al, a. Subjecting logic to the laws of mathematics; as, a mathematicological system.

math″e-mat'ics, math'g-mat'ics, n. The science that treats of quantity, especially by the use of symbols; the science that treats of the measuring of quantities and the ascertainment of their properties and relations.

Mathematics embraces pure mathematics, treating (1) of number (arithmetic and algebra) and (2) of space (geometry), and applied mathematics, used in all the physical sciences (see PHYSICAL), and in logic and economics. In both pure and applied mathematics the treatment may be (1) by synthesis or (2) by analysis. See these words.

The mathematics are mere evolutions of necessary ideas. . . . By no other means could the mind be so effectively apprised of the distinct existence, the firmness, and the stern necessity of principles.
BUSHNELL Work and Play ch. 3, p. 88. [S. '81.]

math'e-meg, math'g-meg, n. A catfish (Amiurus nigricans) of the Saskatchewan river. [Prob. N. Am. Ind.]

math'es, math'ez, n. [Prov.] The common mayweed.

ma-the'sis, ma-thī'sis or -thē'sis, n. [Archaic.] Learning; especially, knowledge of mathematics. ma-the'sy†.

The sublime discoveries of Newton, and, together with these, his not less fruitful than wonderful application of the higher mathesis to the movements of the celestial bodies, and to the laws of light, gave almost a religious sanction to the corpuscular system and mechanical theory.
COLERIDGE Works, Theory of Life in vol. i, p. 380. [H. '58.]

mat'hook†, n. A mattock.

Math'u-rin, math'yu-rin. n. A member of a monastic order, founded in the 12th century, that devoted one-third of its revenue to liberation of Christians held captive by Mohammedans. Called also Trinitarian and Redemptionist. [< Church of St. Mathurin, Paris.]

mat'i-cin, mat'i-sin, n. Chem. A bitter compound contained in matico-leaves, from which it is obtained by distillation. mat'i-cine†.

ma-ti'co[1], ma-ti'cō, n. [Sp.] 1. A Peruvian shrub (Piper angustifolium or Artanthe elongata) of the pepper family (Piperaceæ), the hairy leaves of which are used as a styptic: known in South America as soldier's-herb. 2. A Peruvian species of Eupatorium (E. glutinosum), but of different properties.

mat'ie, mat'i, W. (mē'ti, C.), n. [Local, Eng.] A cured fat herring in which the roe or milt is undeveloped. mat'y‡.

NOAH BARKER Answer to Biographer st. 1.

2. To form or discharge pus or matter, as a sore.

Synonyms: see INTEREST.

mat′ter, n. 1. That which makes up the substance of anything, especially of material things, and which constitutes the material universe; corporeal substance; as, matter is composed of atoms. See def. 3, and STATES OF MATTER, below.

Our first knowledge of spirit and matter is obtained from an intuitive, or immediate, cognition of our own souls and our own bodies. E. J. HAMILTON Mental Science p. 286. [C. & BROS. '85.]

2. The material of which a thing is composed or which enters into its formation; the constituent parts of a thing; as, what matter is put into this mixture?

We do find in the primitive rocks just those mineral matters which now exist in our soils. H. TANNER Sci. of Agric. Practice pt. i, ch. 3, p. 14. [MACM. '81.]

3. Philos. & Physics. The form of being or substance that is characterized by extension, inertia, weight, etc., or, in general, by the properties cognized through the senses and contradictory to those of spirit; extended substance.

In philosophy matter has been very variously regarded, as the permanent possibility of sensation, as force manifesting itself in attraction and repulsion, etc.; but the view of the common-sense school of philosophy is substantially that given in the definition above. The properties of matter, as revealed through perception, have been distributed—as suggested by Descartes, developed by the Scottish school, and stated by Sir William Hamilton—into three classes: (1) Primary properties, those by which material objects are related to space, embracing (a) those that belong to bodies as occupying space, including extension, divisibility, density, ultimate incompressibility, and (b) those that belong to bodies as contained in space, as mobility and situation. (2) Secundo-primary properties, those by which one material object acts on another, appearing as resistances (a) from contraction, as gravity and cohesion, and (b) from repulsion, as elasticity. (3) Secondary properties, those by which material objects are related to the nervous organism, embracing (a) those of special sense, as color, flavor, sound, and odor, (b) those of general sense from foreign causes, as heat and electricitium, and (c) those of general sense less directly from foreign causes, as the power of inducing sneezing or horripilation, or of setting the teeth on edge.

The many theories of the ultimate constitution of matter fall into two classes: (1) those that regard it as made up of atoms, and (2) those that regard it as a homogeneous plenum. The atomic theory in some form is now generally accepted by scientific men, though some conceive the atoms as mere centers of force endowed with inertia (the Boscovich atom theory) and some as whirls or vortices in a fluid ether (Sir William Thomson's vortex-atom theory). The latter is in effect a combination of the atomic and plenum hypotheses. See ATOM; MOLECULE.

4. The essential part of anything; that which constitutes the essence, pith, or substance of a particular thing; as, the matter of a discourse.

In all his [Bacon's] writing it is the matter, the real thing that he wanted to say, that was uppermost.
R. W. CHURCH Bacon ch. 9, p. 202. [H. '84.]

5. Something indefinitely or approximately conceived of; an amount not exactly stated; as, it sold for a matter of fifty dollars. 6. Something thought of indefinitely that is or may be an object of or material for thought; as, a matter of form; household matters. 7. Hence, any subject that occupies the attention or calls for consideration; a subject for discussion or feeling; as, a matter of dispute; a sorrowful matter.

The dullest street of the most prosaic town has matter in it for more smiles, more tears, more intense excitement, than ever were written in story or sung in song. HARRIET B. STOWE Minister's Wooing ch. 8, p. 123. [H. M. & CO. '85.]

8. Something of moment and importance or consequence and significance; a worthy ground of consideration; as, it is no matter what happens. 9. A condition of affairs or state of circumstances, especially if unpleasant or unfortunate; a cause of difficulty; trouble; as, something is the matter with the machinery.

When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my bed to see what was the matter.
C. C. MOORE A Visit from St. Nicholas l. 10.

The left lobe of the cerebellum was entirely converted into a bag of purulent matter. ABERCROMBIE Diseases of the Brain pt. i, § 5, p. 123. [C. & L. '31.]

13. Print. (1) Type that is set or composed: when it is yet to be printed from or to be electrotyped termed live matter or standing matter; when ready for distribution, as after use, dead matter. (2) Material to be set up; copy. 14. Law. See IN RE. 15†. An inducing cause or reason. 16†. Wood. [< F. matière, < L. materia, stuff.] mat′er†; mat′ere†.

See next phrase.—states of m., the three states in which matter is known to exist, namely, the solid, the liquid, and the gaseous. See SOLID; LIQUID; GAS; and compare CRITICAL POINT. Some physicists acknowledge a "fourth state of matter," being that discovered by Crookes in high vacua, where, according to his explanation, each molecule of the residual gas moves in a relatively long path before it collides with another.—what's the m. with (something or somebody)? [Slang], what objection is there to?—implying that there can be no objection.

Derivatives:—mat′ter-ate, vi. [Colloq.] To form or discharge pus or matter.—mat′ter-ful, a. Full of matter; pregnant or pithy; mattery.—mat′ter-less, a. Devoid of matter; lacking in substance or food for thought; as, a matterless sermon.—mat′ter-y, a. 1. Full of matter; as, a mattery sore; mattery discourse. 2. [Rare.] Productive of matter or pus.

2. A standard of measurement. 3. Hence, any standard of criticism, comparison, judgment, or award; as, let him be judged by his own measure; "we will not boast of things without our measure."

Where money is the measure of worth the wrong persons are always uppermost. FROUDE Short Studies, Reciprocal Duties in second series, p. 232. [S. '72.]

4. A system of measurements; a series of measure-units determined by law or fixed by custom; as, apothecaries' measure; cloth-measure.

Most nations have regulated the standard of measures of length by comparison with parts of the human body.
BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. i, ch. 7, p. 274.

5. That by which anything is measured or ascertained; an instrument or vessel of measurement; as, a yard measure; a pint measure.

Ordinary laboratory service requires no other measures than such as are fitted to ascertain the bulk of liquids and gases.
FARADAY Chemical Manipulation § 3, p. 74. [C. & L. '31.]

6. The act of measuring or making a number of measurements for a definite purpose; measurement.

She [Mrs. Mill] was in nothing more valuable to my mental development than by her just measure of the relative importance of different considerations.
MILL Autobiography ch. 7, p. 253. [H. H. & CO. '74.]

7. A quantity determined by a fixed standard, or an indefinite amount capable of measurement; as, a measure of meal; the measure of my skill, my strength, my days. 8. A quantity allotted or meted out, in relation to the standard of measurement; as much as a vessel of measurement will hold; as, full measure. Measure itself, in this use, is sometimes a definite standard.

And Solomon's provision for one day was thirty measures of fine flour, and threescore measures of meal. 1 Kings iv, 22.

9. Known or ascertainable extent or degree; reasonable limits; moderation; as, beyond measure; within measure. 10. A certain proportion; relative extent, amount, or intensity; degree; as, a measure of allowance should be made.

'Ah, curiosity, curiosity!' the lady replied. 'I think our mother Eve bequeathed that quality in quite as bountiful measure to her sons as to her daughters.'
W. GRAHAM in Nineteenth Century Nov., '93, p. 754.

11. A specific act or course of procedure designed as a means to an end; an expedient; method; step; specifically, a legislative bill; as, foolish measures; a party measure.

The true motto for a party is neither 'measures, not men,' nor 'men, not measures,' but measures in men—measures which are in their blood as well as in their brain and on their lips.
E. P. WHIPPLE Success essay iii, p. 70. [O. & CO. '71.]

12. That which makes up a sum or total; the full or sufficient quantity; as, "Thou hast granted us the measure of our desires"; the measure of one's days.

To fill up the measure of his misfortunes, his own followers began to plot against his life.
IRVING Sketch-Book, Philip of Pokanoket p. 373. [G. P. P. '61.]

13. Math. Any quantity regarded as a unit and standard of comparison with other quantities; a quantity of which some other given quantity forms an exact multiple; as, the greatest common measure. 14. Mus. (1) That division of time, containing a specified number of beats, by which the air and motion of music are regulated. (2) The portion of music lying between two barlines. (3) Rate of movement; time; rhythm. 15. Poet. (1) Same as METER. (2) A rhythmical period. (3) A group of times or syllables used to determine the length of a colon, period, or meter. [C.] 16. Dancing. (1) A slow and stately dance, with measured step, such as the minuet.

Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
SHAKESPEARE King Richard III. act i, sc. 1.

(2) [Rare.] Any graceful succession of steps proceeding by regular interval, especially if to the accompaniment of music. 17. pl. Geol. A series of related strata, having some common feature: scarcely used except in such terms as coal-measures, lead-measures.

Insects . . . first appear amid the hard, dry, flowerless vegetation of the Coal Measures, and in genera suited to its character.
HUGH MILLER Testimony of Rocks lect. i, p. 81. [G. & L. '57.]

18. Fencing. The separating distance between fencers.

as determined by the length of reach. 19. Print. The width of a page or column, usually given in ems; as, the measure was 22 ems pica. [< F. mesure, < L. mensura, < mensus, pp. of metior, measure.] mes'ure†.

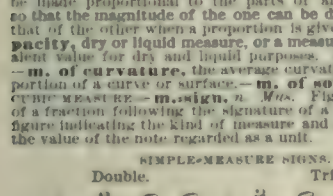
Synonyms: see CRITERION; METER.

Phrases: —above or beyond measure, to an inexpressible extent; excessively. —ale'meas"ure, n. Same as BEER-MEASURE. See BEER. —angular m., the system of units adopted for the measurement of angles or arcs. By the common system the circumference of a circle of which the vertex of the angle to be measured is the center, is regarded as divided into 360 equal parts, or degrees (360°), each degree being usually subdivided into 60 minutes (60′), and each minute into 60 seconds (60″). See CIRCULAR MEASURE, below. —apothecaries' m., a fluid measure of which the fluid ounce is the unit, and the other denominations the minim or drop, drachm and pint. See table below. —barren measures, coal-measures without workable seams. —circular m. 1. The measure of angles used in trigonometry, in which the unit is the angle subtended by an arc equal to the radius. 2. Same as ANGULAR MEASURE. —cloth m., n. See CLOTH. —common m. 1. Same as COMMON DIVISOR. 2. Mus. Duple and quadruple rhythm; 𝄴 or 𝄵: common time. —compound m., rhythm, or time Mus., a measure consisting of 2, 3, or 4 groups of accents. See def. 14 (c), above. —cubic m., the system adopted for measuring volume, especially of solids, of which the unit is the cube of the linear unit. —decimal m., any measure expressed in terms of a decimal system. —double m. (Building), the quality of being molded on both faces: said of a window or door. —dry m., a system of measure used for all goods that are not liquid sold by measure, as corn, fruit, salt, and coal; its unit is a gallon of 268 cubic inches. See table below. —fish m., a system used in the sale of herrings in parts of Great Britain and Ireland. —fluid m., n. Same as APOTHECARIES' MEASURE. —greatest common m. of any given quantities, the highest number of which each quantity is an exact multiple. —imperfect m., rhythm, or time Mus., formerly, all measures not triple. —in a m., to some degree. —in m., in moderation. —liquid m., the system of units customarily adopted in the measurement of liquids, a gallon being the standard, and the pint being divided into gills, and not ounces as in the case of apothecaries' measure. See table below. —long or linear m., a system of measures of length, especially that of which the unit is the yard. —m.-and-a-half, n. Building. The quality of being molded on one side only: said of a door or window. —meas'ure-moth", n. A geometrid. —m. of a number or quantity. Math. 1. Any number or quantity which is an exact divisor of any other given number or quantity. 2. Any quantity the parts of which are or may be made proportional to the parts of another quantity, so that the magnitude of the one can be determined from that of the other when a proportion is given. —m. of capacity, dry or liquid measure, or a measure having equivalent value for dry and liquid purposes. See table below. —m. of curvature, the average curvature at any given portion of a curve or surface. —m. of solidity, same as CUBIC MEASURE. —m.-sign, n. Mus. Figures in the form of a fraction following the signature of a piece, the upper figure indicating the kind of measure and the lower figure the value of the note regarded as a unit.



SIMPLE-MEASURE SIGNS.

COMPOUND-MEASURE SIGNS

An important improvement in compound-measure signs, showing more simply and directly both measure and beat-note, has obtained some foothold. It is as follows:

If the dotted eighth were a beat-note, that would be shown in the same way. This plan avoids all confusion between sextuple measure and compound double. See COMPOUND and SEXTUPLE.

—metric m., same as METRIC SYSTEM. —net m. (Arch.), measure in which no allowance is made for finishing or for the waste of material. —out of m., beyond due measure; immoderately. —single m., the quality of being square on both sides: said of a door or a window. —small m. (Local, U. S.), a quarter of a peck; two quarts. —square m., a system of measures applied to surfaces, of which the unit is the square of the linear unit. —surveyors' m., a system of measures used by surveyors, of which the unit is the chain. —to take measures, to take steps; adopt a course; provide means. —to take one's m., to take the m. of, to take the measurements of a person, or of part of him, as of his foot, for a boot; hence, to gage the points and character of a man; form an estimate of him.

Men take each other's measure, when they meet for the first time, and every time they meet.
EMERSON Conduct of Life, Behavior p. 150. [H. M. & CO. '88.]

—to tread a m., to dance a measure. See def. 16, above. —to use hard measures, to employ harsh, unjust, or oppressive treatment. —wine-m., n. Same as LIQUID MEASURE. —within m., reasonably; moderately. —without m., without reason or moderation.

The following table and notes exhibit such current measures as are reported by reliable authorities to be in use throughout the world. The table also includes many historic measures. Modern measures now in disuse and those of medieval times are occasionally given (see TOISE). As many measures are equally well known under several names (see COVID), separate entries are made of these, in alphabetical order, wherever they are likely to be sought. Those less known will be found in the notes at the number corresponding with that appended to the tabulated name. In calculating the national equivalents, fractional lengths and quantities have been reduced to lowest terms. Quantities within parentheses in 4th column show U. S. or Brit. value, a strictly national equivalent not being available. Whenever necessary, exact fractions have been replaced by simpler ones that are nearly equivalent; thus, $\frac{78}{100}$ is given as $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{23}{29}$ as $\frac{3}{10}$, etc. The metrical equivalents have been given only to two places of decimals, a unit being added in the second decimal place whenever the third exceeds 5. Authorities differ as to exact value in metrical equivalents beyond the decimal point. Some variations will therefore be found, hardly ever exceeding, however, from one to three hundredths of the metrical unit represented. The superior figures used in the table indicate that further information is given in the notes appended. A comprehensive grouping of metrical measures will be found under METRIC SYSTEM.

meas'ured, mezh'urd, pa. 1. Ascertained or computed by rule or standard; determined, adjusted, or proportioned by rule. 2. Hence, uniform; slow and stately; rhythmical; deliberate; as, with measured step.

> You can hear him swing his heavy sledge,
> With measured beat and slow.
> LONGFELLOW Village Blacksmith st. 3.

3. Restrained within bounds; moderated; limited; as, to speak in measured tones.

meas'ured-ly, mezh'yurd-li, adv. [Rare.] With deliberation.

meas'ure-ment, mezh'ur-mĕnt, n. 1. The act of measuring; mensuration; hence, computation; determination by judgment or comparison.

> The principle of compensation is that which lies at the foundation of the common law measurement of damages.
> PARSONS Contracts vol. ii, pt. ii, ch. 8, § 3, p. 442. [L. B. & CO.]

2. The ascertained result of measuring; the dimensions, size, capacity, or amount, as determined by measuring.

> De Nonville, with an eye of skill,
> Took measurement of slope and hill.
> W. H. C. HOSMER Yonnondio can. 1, st. 12.

3. A system of measures or measuring, as applied to any district or trade; as, the distance by Irish measurement.

Phrases:—builders' measurement (Naut.), the shipbuilders' system of computing tonnage; giving results about double the legal or registered tonnage.—m. goods, light goods which in transit are charged by bulk, as opposed to heavy goods which are charged by weight. new m. (Naut.), a system adopted by the United States Congress in 1864 for computing the cargo-carrying capacity of a vessel.

meas'ur-er, mezh'ur-ẽr, n. One who or that which measures. Specifically: (1) One who measures commodities in market. (2) One who measures work on buildings with a view to determining a contractor's compensation. (3) An officer, known as the meter, who formerly measured coal and woolen and other goods in the city of London. (4) A measuring-worm. (5) An instrument specially adapted for measuring.

meas'ur-ing, mezh'ur-ing, ppr. & verbal n. of MEASURE.

—meas'ur-ing-cast", n. A cast or throw that so nearly equals a predecessor that exact measurements only can tell which is the better.—m.-machine, n. A machine for measuring lengths, as a cloth-measuring machine.—m.-worm, n. Any geometrid caterpillar that progresses by alternately looping and straightening its body as if measuring. Called also looper, inchworm, spanworm, and geometer.

Measuring is the first element of many compounds, partially self-explaining; as, measuring-chain (a surveyors' or engineers' chain), m.-faucet, m.-funnel, m.-glass (graduated), m.-pump, m.-tape, m.-wheel a wheelwrights' circumferentor, or an odometer), etc.

1. Cloth-measuring machine, showing dials connected with a toothed wheel below. 2. The same mounted for use. As the cloth is rolled up it rotates the toothed wheel and the length rolled is shown on the dials.

meat, mit, vt. [Old Eng. & Scot.] To furnish with food; feed.

> HOMER Iliad tr. by Chapman, bk. n, l. 336.

meat, n. 1. The flesh of vertebrate animals used as food; sometimes limited, colloquially, to the flesh of mammals, as opposed to poultry, game, fish, frogs, turtles, and the like; as, butchers' meat. 2. Anything eaten for nourishment; solid food of any kind; victuals; hence, figuratively, that which sustains and comforts; as, meat and drink; "my flesh is meat indeed"; "my meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

> Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you.
> John vi, 27.

3. The edible part of anything, especially of food that has to be picked out or detached, as from a shell: sometimes used in the plural; as, the meat of an oyster; walnut-meats; the meat of an egg. 4. The act of taking a meal; partaking of food or meat; as, labor first, then rest and meat.

> And David said unto Jonathan, Behold to-morrow . . . I should not fail to sit with the king at meat.
> 1 Sam. xx, 5.

5. [Local.] Animals collectively, regarded as food; as, meat is killed every Friday. 6. [Archaic.] Meal; flour; as, a meat-offering. 7†. Dinner, regarded as the chief meal, and typical of food in general. [< AS. mete, meat.]

mete†.

Compounds, etc.:—dark meat, such part of the flesh of poultry and some game, as the legs of chickens and turkeys, as, on being cooked, does not become white.—light or white m., the flesh of the breast and wings of some kinds of poultry or game, which, after being cooked, appears white, as in the case of chickens, turkeys, partridges, and some grouse.—meat'-bird", n. [U. S.] The Canada jay.—m.-chopper, n. An implement adapted for chopping or mincing meat.—m.-crusher, n. An instrument for making steak tender by passing it between corrugated rollers.—m.-earth, n. [Prov. Eng.] Soil.—m.-fly, n. A flesh-fly.—m.-form†, n. A form adapted for the accommodation of several at table.—m.-hunter, n. A poot-hunter.—m.-knife, n. A knife with a tang of the full width of the handle, the latter being formed by two flat wooden pieces riveted to the tang.—m.-maggot, n. The larva of a fleshfly.—m.-offering, n. A Hebrew sacrificial offering of fine flour or first fruits with oil and frankincense.—meal'-of"fer-ing,—m. pie. 1. A pie of which the chief ingredient is meat. 2. Local, New Eng.] A mince pie.—m. pudding, a pudding of which the chief ingredient is meat.—m.-rocker, n. A curved-bladed meat-mincing knife, having a handle at each end, and used with a rocking motion.—m.-safe, n. A receptacle for storing meat: walled with perforated zinc or wire gauze.—m.-salesman, n. A vender of meat; specifically, an agent for the sale of carcasses from cattle-raisers to retail butchers.—m.-screen, n. A screen for reflecting the heat upon the back of meat that is roasting before a fire.—m.-tea, n. A high tea, or substantial tea at which meat is served.—m.-tub, n. A pickling-tub, used in salting meat.—to hang up m. [Colloq., U. S.] (Hunting), to kill game, it being usual to let it hang for a time before cooking.—to sit at m., to sit at table.

me-a'tal, mg-ē'tal or -ā'tal, a. Anat. Of or pertaining to a meatus; of the nature of or like a meatus, or open duct.

meat'ed, mīt'ĕd, a. 1. Having meat: chiefly used in composition; as, a coarse-meated fish. 2†. Fed; fattened; foddered.

meath†, meathe†, n. Same as MEAD[1].

meat'i-ness, mīt'i-nes, n. The state or quality of being meaty or like meat, especially of abounding in nourishment or food, intellectual or physical; hence, pithiness.

meat'less, mīt'les, a. Lacking meat; foodless; hungry. mete'les†.

meat'rife, mīt'rīf, a. [Scot.] Abundantly furnished with food.

me-a'tus, mg-ē'tus or -ā'tus, n. [-TUS or -TUS-ES, pl.] A conspicuous passage or canal; as, the auditory or the urethral meatus. [L., passage, < meo, go.]

—me"a-tom'e-ter, n. Surg. An instrument for measuring the diameter of the urethral meatus.—me-at'o-scope, n. Med. A speculum used in examination of the urethral or other meatus. me-at'u-scope‡.—me-at'o-tome, n. A surgical instrument used in enlarging the urethra and in other urethral operations.

meat'y, mīt'i, a. 1. [Local, Eng.] Full of meat; having meat-flesh as opposed to fat. 2. Having the characteristics of or a resemblance to meat. 3. Figuratively, having the essence of the meat; nourishing; hence, pithy.

meaw†, meawl†. Same as MEW, MEWL.

mea'zel†, n. Same as MEASLE.

mea'zle†, vt. To mizzle or mistle.

meb'be, meb'ē, adv. [Dial.] Maybe.

me'bles†, n. pl. Movables.

me-ca'te, mē-cā'tē, n. [Mex. Sp.] 1. [Southwestern U. S.] A hair rope, or one made of the fiber of maguey, used for tying animals, etc. 2. A square measure, about one-tenth of an acre.

mech'al†, a. Adulterous; base.

mech'a-meck, mech'a-mec, n. [N. Am. Ind.] The wild potato-vine (Ipomœa pandurata).

me-chan'ic, mg-can'ic, a. 1. Mechanical; machinal; as, the mechanic arts.

> A brain which, without being slow or mechanic,
> Does more than a larger less drilled, more volcanic.
> LOWELL Fable for Critics st. 36.

2. Supporting the materialistic view of the universe; atomistic. 3. [Archaic.] Like or pertaining to a mechanic; hence, common; vulgar. [< OF. mecanique, < L. mechanicus, < Gr. mēchanikos, < mēchanē, machine.]

me-chan'ic, n. 1. One skilled in the mechanic arts or exercising a mechanical employment; one who has the art of using tools in shaping wood, metal, etc.; a handicraftsman; an artisan. 2. One who works as though he were a machine, by force of habit, and without intelligence: used contemptuously. 3†. Mechanism. 4†. Mechanics.

me-chan'ic-al, mg-can'ic-ql, a. I. Of or pertaining to mechanics on the physical side; in accordance with the laws of physics. 1. Relating to or of the nature of mechanics or mechanism; in accordance with the laws of mechanics; as, mechanical arts.

> It is certain that the power which has provided intelligence and conscience cannot be the ordinary mechanical or the chemical, or even the vital powers.
> MCCOSH Realistic Philos. vol. i, pt. ii, div. iii, p. 185. [S. '90.]

2. Produced by machine or machinery; as, mechanical products. 3. Resulting from the employment of mechanism; operated by machinery; as, a mechanical sweeper. 4. Recognizing only physical forces and laws; materialistic, as a theory or philosophy.

> Lotze for a quarter of a century has opposed the mechanical theory of life.
> JOSEPH COOK Heredity lect. iv, prel., p. 90. [H. M. & CO. '83.]

5. Noting merely quantitative, not molecular or atomic, change in matter: distinguished from physical or chemical.

> Mechanical philosophy teaches that all the simple Mechanical powers are six in number, namely, the lever, wheel and axle, pulley, wedge, inclined plane, and screw. A. MACARTHUR Education and Manual Industry ch. 13, p. 259. [A. '88.]

6. Depending upon trial or experiment, as opposed to theory or scientific authority, as a geometrical construction obtained by instruments alone.

II. Of or pertaining to mechanics with reference to the human agency involved or considered. 1. Having inventive or constructive talent; skilled in mechanics; as, a mechanical genius. 2. Doing the work of a mechanic; having to do with tools or machines; as, a mechanical dentist. 3. Operating as if a machine or machinery; doing or done involuntarily, by mere force of habit; not instinct with life; artificial; also, failing to show independence of thought; slavish; as, mechanical acting; mechanical instruction. 4. [Archaic.] Of or relating to the working class; common; vulgar.

Phrases:—mechanical construction of a curve, a construction due to a mechanical contrivance.—m. effect, an effect produced by mechanical contrivance; work produced with the regularity and effective power of a machine.—m. philosophy, same as CORPUSCULAR PHILOSOPHY.—m. powers, the mechanical contrivances that enter into the composition or formation of all machines—the lever (with its derivatives, the balance, wheel and axle, funicular machine, and pulley) and the inclined plane (with its modifications, the screw and the wedge); as originally used excluding the balance and the funicular machine.—m. work, the work of moving a body through space against the resistance of a force.

me-chan'ic-al, n. 1. pl. India-rubber goods used about machinery. 2. [Rare.] A mechanic.

me-chan'ic-al-ize, mg-can'ic-ql-aīz, vt. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] [Rare.] To make a mere machine of.

me-chan'ic-al-ly, mg-can'ic-ql-i, adv. 1. According to the rules of mechanics; as, work mechanically good. 2. By mechanical power; as, mechanically elevated. 3. Automatically; by rule; without thought or purpose; as, he spoke mechanically. 4. In a manner denoting change of position without change in structure or chemical constitution; as, mechanically mixed.

me-chan'ic-al-ness, mg-can'ic-ql-nes, n. The state or quality of being mechanical.

mech'a-ni'cian, mec'a-nish'an, n. One who understands and applies the principles of mechanics; a designer or maker of machinery; hence, a mechanic.

> No man probably ever bought a watch without looking into its works with an air of great intelligence, though none but a mechanician is any wiser for his survey.
> COOPER Redskins ch. 9, p. 139. [S. & T. '57.]

me-chan'i-cize, mg-can'i-saiz, vt. [Rare.] To make a machine of.

me-chan"i-co-chem'ic-al, mg-can'i-cō-kem'ic-ql, a. Of or related to both mechanics and chemistry: said especially of those phenomena that necessitate in their explanation the application of the laws of both mechanics and chemistry, as electricity, magnetism, and galvanism. [< MECHANIC + CHEMICAL.]

me-chan'ics, mg-can'ics, n. 1. The branch of physics that treats of the phenomena caused by the action of forces on material bodies. It is subdivided into (1) statics and (2) dynamics or kinetics, according as the forces do or do not so balance each other as to produce no motion of the body on which they act; or into (1) the mechanics of rigid bodies and (2) hydromechanics (including hydrostatics and hydrodynamics), according as they act upon rigid bodies or fluids. The special branch of hydromechanics that treats of gases is called pneumatics. Properly mechanics also includes acoustics. See the italicized words.

> The laws of mechanics show that the sum total of rotary motion in a system can never be increased or diminished by the mutual action of its separate parts.
> S. NEWCOMB Popular Astronomy pt. iv, ch. 3, p. 506. [H. '87.]

2†. The science of machinery, or the theory of machines.

Phrases:—analytic mechanics, mechanics treated by algebraic formulas.—animal m., the branch of mechanics that treats of the laws of equilibrium and motion as applied to the human body. For example, the principle of the lever is applied to the arms, powers and fulcra being respectively represented by bones, contractile muscles, and joints, while the weight or resistance is referred to the weight of the body or of individual limbs.—applied m., the principles of mechanics as applied to the construction of machinery (practical m.) and to art generally.—celestial m., the science of the motions of the heavenly bodies as deduced from their mutual gravitation.

mech'a-nism, mec'a-nizm, n. 1. The structure or means of action of any mechanical contrivance; the sum and arrangement of interdependent parts in a machine of any kind; machinery, or a system of machinery.

> A human organism with all its parts perfect, and all its parts in harmonious action, is a splendid mechanism which can never cease to awaken admiration and wonder.
> WINCHELL Walks and Talks ch. 53, p. 306. [CHAUT. '90.]

2. Kinematics. An ideal machine; a combination of movable bodies constituting a machine, but considered only with regard to relative movements. [W.] 3. A system of means and appliances which constitute a working agency; as, the mechanism of an engine; the mechanism of society. 4†. Action according to mechanical principles. [< LL. mechanisma, < Gr. mēchanē, machine.]

mech'a-nist, mec'a-nist, n. 1. A designer or constructor of machines, or an expert in the mechanic arts; a mechanician. 2. Philos. A believer in atomism or the materialistic philosophy; one who denies an overruling intelligence in the universe.

—mech"a-nis'tic, a. Relating to mechanists; of the nature of mechanism.

mech'a-nize, mec'a-naiz, vt. [-NIZED; -NI'ZING.] To make mechanical; construct mechanically; work out the mechanical details of (a design or idea); mechanicize. mech'a-nise‡.

> The artisan is restless and dissatisfied, he is mechanised, he finds no interest in his work. BARING-GOULD Germany, Present and Past p. 93. [D. M. & CO.]

mech'a-ni"zer, mec'a-nai'zẽr, n. 1. One who constructs mechanically. 2. One who makes mechanical order or system the basis of his theories. mech'a-ni"ser‡.

mech'an-o-graph, mec'an-o-grqf, W. (mg-can'o-grqf, C.), n. A copy, especially of a work of art, produced by mechanical process on a machine. [< Gr. mēchanē, machine, + graphō, write.]

—mech"an-o-graph'ic, a. 1. Relating to mechanography; copied or reproduced by mechanical process. 2. [Rare.] Pertaining to mechanics.—mech"an-og'ra-phist, n. A maker of mechanographs.—mech"an-og'ra-phy, n. The art of copying or reproducing a writing or work of art by mechanical process on a machine.

mech"an-ol'o-gy, mec'an-el'o-ji, n. [Rare.] The knowledge of or a treatise on mechanics or mechanism.

> The science of style, considered as a machine, in which words act upon words, and through a particular grammar, might be called the mechanology of style. DE QUINCEY Hist. and Crit. Essays, Style vol. ii, pt. ii, p. 102. [T. & F. '53.]

mech"an-o-mor'phic, mec'an-o-mōr'fic, a. [Rare.] Resembling a mechanism or machine, or setting forth such resemblance; as, a mechanomorphic God.

> It is still a more curious notion of dignity that rejects the anthropomorphic, and substitutes therefor a mechanomorphic theory. WHEDON Essays, Haeckel's Atheism p. 265. [P. & H. '87.]

mech"an-ur'gy, mec'an-ūr'ji, n. [Rare.] The department of mechanics that treats of machines in motion. [< Gr. mēchanourgia, < mēchanē, machine, + ergon, work.]

Mech'i-tar-ist, n. Same as MEKHITARIST.

Mech'lin, mec'lin. I. a. Belonging to or made at Mechlin (Malines) in Belgium; as, Mechlin lace. (See illus. under LACE. II. n. Mechlin lace.

—Mechlin embroidery, Mechlin lace.

mech-lo'ic, mec-lō'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from meconin. [< MECONIN + CHLORIN.]

—mechloic acid, a crystalline compound obtained by the action of chlorin on meconin.

me-cho'a-can, mg-chō'a-can, I. W. Wr.[2] (-cō'-, Sm. Wr.[1]), n. An inferior kind of jalap obtained from the tuberous roots of a species of the bindweed family (Convolvulaceæ), variously represented to be Batatas Jalapa, Ipomœa Jalapa, and Convolvulus Mechoacan. The roots are called Mechoacan roots, from Mechoacan, Mexico, near which they are found.

me-cis"to-ceph'a-lous, mg-sis'to-sef'a-lus, a. Having a cephalic index of 69 and under. [< Gr. mēkistos, superl. of makros, long, + kephalē, head.]

Meck-e'lian, mek-ī'lian, a. Of, pertaining to, or discovered by J. F. Meckel (1781-1833), an anatomist of Halle, Germany.—Meckelian or Meckel's cartilage, the cartilaginous bar that temporarily forms the skeleton of the mandibular arch in the fetus.

meck'i-as, mek'i-as, n. [Ar.] A measuring-instrument, particularly the nilometer at Roudhah. meg'y-as‡.

me-com'e-ter, mę-cem'ę-tęr, n. Surg. A graduated compass for measuring the length of new-born infants. [< Gr. mēkos, length, + metron, measure.]

me-con'ic, mę-con'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from poppy. [< Gr. mēkōnikos, of a poppy, < mēkōn, poppy.] — meconic acid (Chem.), a white crystalline compound ($C_7H_4O_7$) with which morphin and other alkaloids are combined in poppy-juice; obtained as a by-product in the preparation of such alkaloids.

— mec'o-nate, n. Chem. A salt of meconic acid.

me-con'i-din, } mę-con'i-din, -din or -dĭn, n. An me-con'i-dine, } amorphous alkaline unstable alkaloid ($C_{21}H_{23}NO_4$) contained in opium. [< MECONIC.]

mec"o-nid'i-um, mec'o-nid'i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Zoöph. A peculiar sporosac resembling a poppy-capsule on the summit of the gonangium in some hydroids. [Dim. of Gr. mēkōn, cuttlefish's ink-bag, poppy.]

Meconidia of a Hydroid (Gonothyræa hyalina).
g, gonanglium; m, meconidia; o, an ovum; b, blastostyle; p, gonophores in process of development.

me-con'i-nin, } mec'o-nin, n. A colmec'o-nine, } orless, crystalline, neutral compound ($C_{10}H_{10}O_4$) contained in opium and regarded as the anhydrid of meconic acid. Called also opianyl. mec-o-o'ni-a‡; mec"o-ni'na‡.

— mec"o-nin'ic, a. Of or obtained from poppy-juice. — meconinic acid, a compound known only by its salts, which are formed by decomposing meconin.

me-co'ni-old, mę-cō'ni-oid, a. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from meconium. [< MECONIUM + -OID.]

me-co'ni-um, mę-cō'ni-um, n. 1. The first feces of a new-born child. 2†. Opium. [L., < Gr. mēkōnion, < mēkōn, poppy.]

— me-co"ni-or-rhe'a, n. An improperly heavy discharge of infantile meconium.

mec"o-noph'a-gism, mec'o-nof'ą-jizm, n. The act or practise of eating opium; the opium habit. [< Gr. mēkōn, poppy, + phagein, eat.]

— mec"o-noph'a-gist, n. An opium-eater.

Me-cop'te-ra, mę-cop'tę-ra, n. pl. Entom. The Panorpatæ. [< Gr. mēkos, length, + pteron, wing, < petomai, fly.] Me-cap'te-ra‡.

— me-cop'ter, n. — me-cop'ter-ous, a.

med'al, med'al, vt. [Rare.] To dignify with the gift of a medal; confer a medal upon.

med'al, n. 1. A piece of metal, commonly circular, with the head or effigy of a person struck upon it, or engraved with a figure, scene, or allegorical group.

Medals in this sense are commemorative or official, and are not intended for currency. They are either struck or cast, the side containing the head or principal part being called the obverse, the other or less important side the reverse. The medallic art reached its height in Italy in the 15th century, in the medals of Vittore Pisano, or Pisanello, which were almost equaled by those of the Nuremberg and Augsburg schools of the Renaissance and by the French medals. Medals are now chiefly bestowed for naval or military services or for merit. See plate of DECORATIONS.

These medals [souvenir spoons] . . . are generally of silver, sometimes with gold bowl, but seldom all of gold.
MARCUS BENJAMIN in Appleton's Annual Cyc., '91 p. 802.

2. An ancient coin, especially any large Greek silver coin of notable beauty, such as the 4th-century decadrachm of Syracuse. See plate of COINS, fig. 15. [< OF. medaille, < L. metallum; see METAL, n.]

Compounds: — med'al-cup", n. A goblet ornamented with inlaid medals. m. tankard‡. — m. machine, n. A carving-machine for copying on an enlarged or reduced scale medals or similar art-works in relief.

Derivatives: — med'al-et, n. A somewhat diminutive medal: frequently so called, however, when as large as an English half-crown or American half-dollar. mel'o-dist, mel'o-dist, n. 1. A composer or singer of melodies; a master of melody.

As an absolute melodist — I mean a master of word-music as distinct from other qualities — I consider Swinburne unequalled.
WILLIAM GRAHAM in Nineteenth Century Nov., '93, p. 765.

2. A collection of melodies.

mel'o-dize, mel'o-dīz, v. [-DIZED; -DI'ZING.] I. t. To render melodious.

The strife of Apollo and Marsyas represented the enduring contest between music in which the words and thoughts lead, and the lyre measures or melodizes them, . . . and music in which the words are lost, and the wind or impulse leads.
RUSKIN Queen of the Air pt. i, p. 58. [S. E. & CO. '69.]

II. i. To make melody or melodies. mel'o-dise‡.

mel"o-dra'ma, mel'o-drā'ma or -drē'ma (XIII), n. 1. A drama with a romantic story or plot and sensational situation and incidents.

It is the custom on the stage, in all good murderous melodramas, to present the tragic and the comic scenes, in as regular alternations as the layers of red and white in a side of streaky, well-cured bacon.
DICKENS Oliver Twist ch. 17, p. 75. [P. & C.]

2. A musical drama interspersed with spoken dialogue; an operetta.

A Melodrama is a short dramatic composition into which music is introduced. Its plot is generally of an insignificant character, the display of gorgeous scenery being its chief object.
QUACKENBOS Rhetoric pt. v, lesson cviii, p. 421. [A. '82.]

3. An opera. [< F. mélodrame, < Gr. melos, song, + drama; see DRAMA.] mel'o-dram‡; mel'o-drame‡.

mel'o-dy, mel'o-di, n. [-DIES, pl.] 1. An agreeable succession of sounds; especially, in music, a rhythmic succession of simple tones, commonly in the same key, so related as to form or give expression to a thought or idea, and constituting, in combination, a characteristic and pleasing whole: sometimes used as synonymous with tune or air.

Sweetest melodies
Are those that are by distance made more sweet.
WORDSWORTH Personal Talk st. 2.

2. A tuneful poem or song arranged to music.

The touching and inimitable melodies of my countryman Thomas Moore. WM. CARLETON Irish Peasantry intro., p. 4. [W. L. & CO.]

3. Mus. The chief voice-part in giving a harmonic composition, now the soprano, formerly the tenor; the air.

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard Are sweeter. KEATS Grecian Urn st. 2.

4. Rhet. Such an arrangement of the clauses or members of sentences that, when correctly spoken, the successions of pitch will be agreeably harmonious and assonant, or pleasing to the ear: one of the absolute properties of style.

By simply altering the length of one or two of the clauses, the melody may be entirely destroyed through a mere change of proportion between the parts. DAY Discourse § 266, p. 238. [S. '67.]

[< F. mélodie, < LL. melodia, < Gr. melōdia, < melos, song, + ōdē, ODE.]

Synonyms: harmony, music, unison. Harmony is simultaneous; melody is successive; harmony is the pleasing correspondence of two or more notes sounded at once, melody the pleasing succession of a number of notes continuously following one another. A melody may be wholly in one part; harmony must be of two or more parts. Accordant notes of different pitch sounded simultaneously produce harmony; unison is the simultaneous sounding of two or more notes of the same pitch. When the pitch is the same, there may be unison between sounds of very different volume and quality, as a voice and a bell may sound in unison. Tones sounded at the interval of an octave are also said to be in unison, although this is not literally exact; this usage arises from the fact that bass and tenor voices in attempting to sound the same note as the soprano and alto will in fact sound a note an octave below. Music may denote the simplest melody or the most complex and perfect harmony.

The language of music has been applied to colours. . . . Colours are said to be in melody when two contiguous tints, or shades or hues, run insensibly into each other.

mer'cu-ry†, vt. To wash with a solution of mercury.

mer'cu-ry, mėr'kiu-ri, n. 1. Chem. A silver-white metallic element, liquid at ordinary temperatures. See ELEMENT. Called colloquially quicksilver. Mercury is used chiefly for obtaining gold and silver from their ores (see AMALGAMATION) and in the barometer and thermometer. Its most useful compounds are mercuric chlorid (corrosive sublimate), mercurous chlorid (calomel), and the sulfid (cinnabar). It dissolves most metals. See AMALGAM. 2. [Colloq.] The quicksilver in the tube of a barometer or thermometer, especially as marking atmospheric conditions; as, the mercury stands 95° in the shade. 3. [M-] The planet of our system nearest the sun; the smallest of all the major planets, having a diameter of about 3,000 miles and revolving about the sun in 88 of our days. It is thought to revolve on its axis only once during its sidereal year.

> The nearness of Mercury to the Sun, prevents us from obtaining any very accurate knowledge of its surface.
> J. N. LOCKYER Elements of Astronomy ch. 8, art. celxi, p. 137. [A. '89.]

Mercury, with Caduceus and Purse. (From the manuscript Vergil in the Vatican.)

Compounds, etc.:—English mercury, a species of goosefoot (Chenopodium Bonus-Henricus) used for spinach and sometimes as a vulnerary. Called also good-King-Henry. mer'cu-ry-goose"foot;.—mer'cu-ry-cup", n. 1. The cistern of a mercury barometer. 2. A cup containing mercury for making an electric connection, as by dipping the ends of two wires in it.—m.-pump, n. An air-pump without a piston, acting by the fall of mercury through a tube. Such pumps are of two types, the Geissler, in which mercury alternately fills and is drawn off from a globe connecting with the vessel to be exhausted, and the Sprengel, where mercury-drops in a descending column carry off the air between them. The first type is more rapid, but the second gives higher vacua.—m.-tube, n. A glass tube in which a faint flash of light is caused by the fall of mercury within it, which generates electricity by friction against the sides of the tube.—m.-valve, n. A valve which is closed by the immersion of the edge of a disk or an inverted cup in a body of mercury.—three-seeded m., an American weed (Acalypha Virginica) of the same family as the English mercury.

mes'ad, mes'ad, W. (mī'sad, C.), adv. In a direction toward the median plane. [< MESON + L. ad, to.]

mes'al, mes'ul, a. Of, pertaining to, or situated in or toward the meson or median plane of the body.

mé"sal"li"ance', mē'zą'lī'ąns', n. [F.] A marriage with one of inferior position or condition; misalliance.

mes"a-me'boid, mes'a-mī'boid, n. Embryol. One of the ameboid cells developed in the mesoderm; also, a leucocyte. [< MES- + AMEBA + -OID.] mes"a-mœ'boid‡.

mes"a-ra'ic, mes'a-rē'ic. I. a. Mesenteric. mes"a-ra'ic-al‡. II. n. The mesentery. [< Gr. mesaraion, mesentery, < mesos, middle, + araia, stomach, < araios, thin.]

Mes"ar-se'ni-a, mes'ar-sī'ni-ą or -sē'ni-ą, n. pl. Conch. The octopod cephalopods, in which hectocotylization takes place in the third arm. [< MES- + Gr. arsēn, male.] — mes"ar-se'ni-an, a.

mes-ar"te-ri'tis, mes-ār'tę-rai'tis or -ri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the middle coat of an artery. [< MES- + Gr. artēria, artery.] mes"ar-te"ri-i'tis‡.

mes"a-ti-ceph-al'ic, mes'a-ti-sef-al'ic, a. Craniom. Having a cephalic index between 75 and 80. [< Gr. mesatos, superl of mesos, middle, + CEPHALIC.] mes"a-ti-ceph'a-lous‡. — mes"a-ti-ceph'a-lus‡, n. A person with a mesaticephalic skull.

mes"a-ti-pel'vic, mes'a-ti-pel'vic, a. Having a pelvis in which the anteroposterior diameter is from .90 to .95 of the transverse. [< Gr. mesatos, superl. of mesos, middle, + PELVIC.] mes"a-ti-pel'lic‡.

mes-cal', mes-cal', C. (męs-cāl', W.), n. [Sp.] Same as PULQUE BRANDY. mex-cal'‡; mez-cal'‡.

mes-chaunce'†, n. Mischance. mes-chance'†.

mes'chief†, n. Mischief; misfortune. mes'cheef†.

mes"dames', mę'dąm' or mez'damz, n. [F.] Plural of MADAME. — mes"dem-oi-selles', mē'dem-wā-zel', n. Plural of MADEMOISELLE.

mese†, vt. To subdue; appease.

mese†, n. A meal.

me-seems', mę-sēmz', v. impers. [Poet.] It seems to me. See METHINKS. me-seem'†; me-seem'eth‡.

Meseems. — Equivalent to it seems to me; mihi videtur. . . . The verb seems is intransitive, consequently the pronoun me has the power of a dative case. The pronoun it is not required to accompany the verb. R. G. LATHAM Eng. Language vol. ii, pt. v, ch. 18, p. 393. [WA. & M. '75.]

mes'el†, n. A leper. mes'ell†; mes'sel†. — mes'el-house"†, n. A leper-hospital. — mes'eled†, a. Leprous. — mes'eled-ness†, n. — mes'el-ry†, n. Leprosy. mes'el-rie†.

Mes-em"bry-a'ce-æ, mes-em'bri-ē'sę-ī or -ę'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. An order of plants — the ice-plant or fig-marigold family — more commonly known as Ficoideæ. [< MESEMBRYANTHEMUM.]

Mes-em"bry-an'the-mum, mes-em'bri-an'thę-mum, n. Bot. 1. A large mainly Old World genus of herbs of the ice-plant or fig-marigold family (Ficoidæ), with opposite thick, fleshy, entire leaves and conspicuous axillary or terminal clusters of white, yellow, or rose-colored flowers, many of them opening only for a short time in the middle of the day. Fully 150 of the 300 species are in ornamental cultivation. 2. [m-] A plant of this genus, known popularly as fig-marigold or ice-plant. [< Gr. mesēmbria (< mesos, middle, + hēmera, day), midday, + anthemon, flower, < anthos, flower.]

mes"en-ceph'a-lon, mes'en-sef'ą-lon, n. Anat. The parts derived from the third cerebral vesicle of the embryo, being the crura and the corpora quadrigemina of the brain; the midbrain. See illus. under CEREBRAL VESICLE. [< MES- + ENCEPHALON.]

mes-en"ceph-al'ic, a.

mes'en-chyme, mes'en-kim, n. The portion of the mesoderm that produces the connective tissues of the body. [< MES- + Gr. enchyma; see ENCHYMA.] mes-en'chy-mal. — mes-en'chy-mal, mes"en-chym'a-tous, a.

me-sen'un, n. Same as MU-SEN'Ą.

mu-sen'un, n. African tree (Albizzia anthelmintica); also, the bark of this tree, used as a vermifuge. be-sen'na‡; bi-sen'na‡.

mes"en-ter'ic, mes'en-ter'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or resembling a mesentery. mes"en-te'ri-al‡.

— mesenteric artery, one of the two large branches of the abdominal aorta that pass through the mesentery to supply the intestine; distinguished as the superior and the inferior mesentery. See illus. under ARTERY. — mes"en-te-ri'o-lum, mes'en-tę-rai'o-lum or -ri'o-lum, n. A fold of the peritoneum that invests the vermiform appendage. [Dim. of MESENTERIUM.] — mes"en-te-ri'tis, mes'en-tę-rai'tis or -ri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the mesentery. — mes-en'te-ro-blast, mes-en'tę-ro-blast, n. The sheet of the mesoderm that assists in forming the wall of the alimentary canal. [< Gr. mesenteron (see MESENTERON) + blastos, germ.] — mes-en'te-ron, mes-en'tę-ron, n. [-RA, pl.] 1. Embryol. The middle portion of the primitive intestinal cavity, lined with entoderm: distinguished from the buccal and anal parts, which are lined with ectoderm. 2. Zool. The midgut. [< Gr. mesenteron, < mesos, middle, + enteron; see ENTERO-.] — mes-en'te-ron'ic, a. — mes-en"te-roph'thi-sis, mes-en'tę-rof'thi-sis, n. Pathol. An engorgement and tubercular degeneration of the mesenteric glands, attended by emaciation; consumption of the bowels; tabes mesenterica. [< Gr. mesenteron (see MESENTERON) + phthisis, consumption.]

mes'en-ter-y, mes'en-ter-i or mez'en-tęr-i (XIII), n. 1. Anat. A fold of the peritoneum that invests an intestine or other viscus and connects it with the abdominal wall; especially, the fold investing the small intestine. 2. Zoöph. Some part dividing the perivisceral cavity; especially, one of the thin membranous vertical radiate partitions dividing off the perivisceral cavity of an actinozoan, as a sea-anemone, into chambers. [< Gr. mesenterion, < mesos, middle, + enteron; see ENTERO-.] mes"en-te'ri-um‡. mes-ep"i-me'ron, mes-ep'i-mī'ren or -mē'ron, n. Entom. The epimeron of the mesopleuron. [< MES- + EPIMERON.] — mes-ep"i-me'ral, a.

1. Liver. 2. Duodenum. 3. Pancreas. 4. Spleen. 5. Upper extremity of jejunum. 6, 6. Mesentery, the intestine being cut away so as to display its folds. 7. Lower extremity of small intestine. 8. Cæcum. 9. Vermiform appendix. 10. Ascending colon. 11. Transverse colon. 12. Descending colon. 13. Sigmoid flexure. 14. Rectum. 15. Bladder.

mes-ep"i-ster'num, mes-ep'i-stęr'num, n. Entom. The episternum of the mesopleuron. [< MES- + EPISTERNUM.] — mes-ep"i-ster'nal, a.

mes"e-ra'ic, a. Same as MESARAIC: an erroneous form.

mes-eth'moid, mes-eth'moid, a. Of or pertaining to the mesethmoid.

mes-eth'moid, n. The middle ethmoid, in man the so-called perpendicular plate of the ethmoid bone of the skull, uniting with the rest of the bone at the sixth year, but an independent bone throughout life in many animals. [< MES- + ETHMOID.] mes"eth-moi'dal‡.

mesh, mesh, v. I. t. 1. To make the meshes of; make into a mesh or network; as, to mesh a net. 2. To involve in meshes, as a fish in a net; entangle; snare.

Mesh'd in the net himself had twined.
SCOTT Rokeby can. 6, st. 17.

3. To engage or interlock, as gear-teeth, with one another.

II. i. 1. To make meshes, as of nets or network. 2. To become engaged, as gear-teeth. mesh†.

— mesh'ing-net", n. A gill-net.

mesh, n. 1. One of the open spaces between the cords or threads of a net or network, or the wires of a sieve. 2. The threads that bound such an open space; in the pattern, network; in lace-making, the whole background, though the interstices may be very irregular.

As the sturgeon leaps and struggles
In a net to break its meshes.
LONGFELLOW Hiawatha pt. v, st. 22.

3. Figuratively, anything that entangles, snares, or constrains; a trap: usually in the plural. 4. An implement for making stitches of regular size in embroidery and knitting. 5. Mech. The engagement or meshing of one tooth or set of gear-teeth with another, as of two spur-gears, or of a rack and a pinion. 6†. A net. [< AS. max, mesh; cp. G. masche.] mash†; mask‡ [Dial.]; meash†.

— mesh'-stick", n. A slat on which twine is looped and knotted in making nets. — mesh structure (Petrol.), a structure resembling network or latticework found in certain alteration products of minerals. Called also net structure, lattice structure. — mesh'work", n. A combination of meshes; a net or network.

meshed[1], mesht, pa. 1. Provided with meshes, as a net; also, decorated with a pattern resembling a net. 2. [Rare.] Entangled, as an insect in a web.

meshed[2]†, a. Converted into mash; brewed.

meshi, pa. Meshed. PHIL. SOC.

mesh'y, mesh'i, a. Forming or formed like a network.

mes'i-ad, mes'i-ad, adv. Same as MESAD.

mes'i-al, mes'i-al, C.[1] (mez'i-al, Wr.; mī'zi-al, C.[2] E. J.; mī'zhul, W.) (XIII), a. Situated in or directed toward the middle, especially the middle longitudinal line of the body; median. [< Gr. mesos, middle.] mes'i-an‡.

— mesial plane, the meson or median plane.

mes'i-on, mes'i-en, n. Same as MESON.

mes-i'ris, mes-ai'ris or -i'ris, n. The middle layer of the iris of the eye, containing the blood-vessels, muscles, and nerves. [< MES- + IRIS.]

mes'ite, mes'ait, n. Chem. A mobile oxygenated oil obtained by distilling lignone with sulfuric acid. [< Gr. mesos, middle.]

— mes'i-tene, n. A mobile oxygenated oil similar to mesite, obtained by distilling lignone with sulfuric acid.

Mes-it'i-dæ, mes-it'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Ornith. A Madagascan family of grallatorial birds having a thrush-like

mes'i-tite, mes'i-toit, n. Mineral. A vitreous, yellowish, transparent to subtranslucent magnesium-iron carbonate ($Mg_3FeC_3O_9$), crystallizing in the hexagonal system. Called also mesitine-spar. [< Gr. mesitēs, one in the middle, < mesos, middle, from its being intermediate between magnesite and siderite.]

mes'it-yl, mes'it-il, n. Chem. A hypothetical organic radical (C_9H_{11}) said to exist in acetone: a partial anagram of methyl and acetone. [< MESITITE + -YL.] — mes"it-yl'e-nate, n. Chem. A salt of mesitylenic acid.

mes'it-yl-ene, mes'it-il-ēn, C. (mī-sit'i-lēn, W.), n. A colorless oily liquid compound (C_9H_{12}) derived from coal-tar and isomeric with cumene, produced when acetone is treated with sulfuric acid. — mes'it-yl-ol, n. A crystalline derivative of mesitylene.

mes"it-yl-en'ic, mes'it-il-en'ik, a. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from mesitylene. — mesitylenic acid, a colorless crystalline compound ($C_6H_3(CO_2)_3$) obtained by boiling mesitylene with dilute nitric acid.

mes'i-um, mes'i-um, n. Same as MESON, 1.

mes'jid, n. Same as MASJID.

mes-ki'ti, mes-kī'ti, n. [Afr.] A church, temple, or house of worship: so called in the Kiswahili language. [< Sp. mezquita, < Ar. masjid, mosque, < sajada, pray.]

mes'lin†, n. Same as MASLIN.

mes"mer-ee', mez'mgr-ī', n. One who is, or is being, mesmerized.

mes-mer'ic, mez-mer'ik, a. Pertaining to, caused by, or resembling mesmerism; as, the mesmeric influence; a mesmeric condition.

I feel a mesmeric impression that you have been bothering me with magnetic passes. DE QUINCEY Essays on Philosoph. Writers, Hamilton in vol. i, p. 7. [T. & F. '56.]

mes'mer-ism, mez'mgr-izm, n. 1. Originally, the doctrine or theory, as propounded and exemplified by Franz Mesmer (1733–1815), that one person can produce in another an abnormal condition resembling sleep, with or without somnambulism, during which the mind of the subject remains passively subject to the will of the operator; also, the phenomena that gave rise to this theory: explained by Mesmer as due to animal magnetism, and produced, as he claimed at first, by actual magnets, but now identified with hypnotism. See HYPNOTISM.

The general principle underlying the mesmeric theory and its phenomena has been treated of under various names. Compare ANIMAL MAGNETISM; ARTIFICIAL SOMNAMBULISM; BRAIDISM; ELECTROBIOLOGY; JAR-PHOONK; NEURO-HYPNOTISM; PSYCHOLOGY; SUGGESTION.

Mesmerism is not a whit more puzzling than many common things in natural history.

GEORGE MOORE Body and Mind ch. 5, p. 65. [H. '49.]

2. The power or influence exerted or exercised by the mesmerist; hence, any strong personal influence; personal magnetism.

Many a speaker, by the very mesmerism of his own heart-power, has raised dead words from the ground and made them electrify a great audience with their startling life.

mes'mer-ist, mez'mgr-ist, n. 1. One who mesmerizes; a professional mesmerizer. 2. A believer in mesmerism.

mes'mer-ize, † mez'mgr-īz, vt. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] To mes'mer-ise, † influence by mesmerism; bring into the mesmeric or hypnotic state; hypnotize; figuratively, to exercise strong personal influence or fascination upon.

There we might remain a long time, planted round him like trees, for he was a mesmerizing talker.

J. M. BARRIE Window in Thrums ch. 5, p. 44. [L. C. & CO.]

— mes"mer-i-za'[or -sa']tion, n. — mes'mer-i"zer or -ser, n. One who mesmerizes.

mes"mer-o-ma'ni-a, mez'mgr-o-mē'ni-ɑ or -mg'ni-ɑ, n. Mesmerism considered as a delusion. [< MESMERISM + MANIA.] — mes"mer-o-ma'ni-ac, n.

mesn'al-ty, min'ɑl-ti, n. The estate of a mesne lord. mesn-al'i-ty‡.

mesne, min, a. Law. Being between two periods or extremes; intermediate; intervening. [OF., < L. mediānus; see MEAN², a.] — mesne lord, in feudal law, one holding lands as intermediate between a superior lord and a subordinate tenant. — m. process, any writ or process issued in an action between its commencement and the final process of execution. — m. profits, the rents and profits of lands received by one wrongfully in possession, between his entry and ejectment.

meso-, mes-. Derived from Greek mesos, middle: combining forms. — mes"o-a'ri-um, n. Anat. The mesovarium. — mes"o-a'ri-al, a. — mes'o-blast, n. The mesoderm or middle germinal layer of the embryo. — mes"o-blas-te'ma, n. The blastema of germinal cells of the mesoblast. — mes"o-blas-te'mic, a. — mes"o-blas'tic, a. — mes"o-bran'chi-al, a. Covering the middle of the branchial chamber, as a lobe of the carapace of a crab. — mes"o-bron'chi-um, n. The principal bronchus of either lung. — mes"o-cæ'cum, n. The peritoneal fold that attaches the cæcum to the body-wall. — mes"o-cæ'cal, a. — mes"o-car'di-um, n. Embryol. The serous fold that connects the heart with the body-wall and primitive intestine. — mes'o-carp, n. Bot. The middle layer of a pericarp. — Mes"o-car-pa'ce-æ, n. pl. An order of green fresh-water algæ, class Conjugatæ, composed of cylindrical usually unbranched filaments of elongated cells in which the chlorophyl is arranged in a thin axile plate. Reproduction is usually by scalariform conjugation. Mes"o-car'pus, n. (t. g.) Mes"o-car'pe-æ‡. — mes"o-car-pa'ceous, a. — mes"o-ceph'al'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the middle region of the head, or the pons Varolii of the brain. 2. Craniom. Having a capacity of 1,450 to 1,650 cubic centimeters (Topinard), or of 1,350 to 1,450 cubic centimeters (Quain): said of a skull. 3. Having a head of medium length, or of average capacity. mes"o-ceph'a-lous‡. — mes"o-ceph'a-lon, n. The pons Varolii. — mes"o-ceph'a-lus, n. A mesocephalic individual. — mes"o-ceph'a-ly, n. The condition of being mesocephalic. mes"o-ceph-a'li-a‡; mes"o-ceph'a-lism‡. — mes'o-chil, n. Bot. The middle lobe of a trilobed lip of an orchid flower. mes"o-chil'i-um‡. — mes"o-chon'dri-um, n. The matrix of hyaline cartilage. — mes"o-cho-roi'de-a, n. The middle layer of the choroid coat of the eye, consisting mainly of blood-vessels. — mes'o-cœle, n. The mesocœlia. See illus. under CEREBRAL VESICLE. — mes"o-cœ'li-a, n. The cavity of the third cerebral vesicle; the aqueduct of Sylvius. — mes"o-cœ'li-an, a. — mes"o-cœ'lom, n. Embryol. The part of the body-cavity that forms the cavity of the primitive renal organs. — mes-oc'o-lon, C. (mes"o-co'lon, E. I. W. Wr.), n. The fold of peritoneum that connects the colon with the body-wall. — mes"o-col'ic, a. — mes"o-con'chous, a. Craniom. Having an orbital index of 80.1 to 85: said of a skull. — mes"o-cor'a-coid. I. a. Of or pertaining to the mesocoracoid. II. n. A bone situated between and bridging the hypercoracoid and hypocoracoid in malacopterygian fishes. — mes"o-cor'ne-a, n. The middle or principal portion of the cornea. — mes-oc'ra-cy, n. Government by the middle classes. — mes"o-cu'ne-i-form, C. (mes"o-cu-ne'i-form, W.), n. A small bone of the ankle at the base of the second metatarsal bone; the middle cuneiform bone. mes"o-cu'ni-form‡. — mes'o-cyst, n. A fold of the peritoneum occasionally found connecting the gall-bladder with the liver. — mes'-ode, n. Anc. Pros. A lyric passage intervening between a strophe and its antistrophe; episode. Compare ODE. — mes'o-derm, n. 1. The middle germ-layer of the embryo, from which are developed the muscular, vascular, and osseous systems. See GERM-LAYER, with illus. 2. Bot. The middle layer of the wall of a moss-capsule. — mes"o-der'mal, a. — mes"o-der'mic, a. — Mes"o-der-ma'-li-a, n. pl. Zool. The sponges as a phylum of the animal kingdom. — mes"o-der-ma'li-an, a. & n. — Mes"o-des'mi-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A family of myacean bivalves having the siphons divergent from their base and a closable cuneiform or oval shell with an internal shelf for the ligament and teeth, as in Mactridæ. Mes"o-des'ma, n. (t. g.) Mes"o-des-mat'i-dæ‡. — mes"o-des'mid, n. — mes"o-des'moid, a. — mes-od'ic, a. Anc. Pros. Denoting or pertaining to a metrically different colon, line, or system intervening between two similar cola, lines, or systems; especially, indicating or containing a different metrical system appearing between the strophe and antistrophe of a chorus. — mes" od-mi'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the pleural walls formed by the mediastinum; pleurisy. — mes'o-dont, a. 1. Having teeth of medium size; specifically, having a dental index between 42 and 44. 2. Of or pertaining to the Mesodonta. — Mes" o-don'ta, n. pl. Mam. A group of bunotherian mammals. — mes" o-du" o-de'num, n. A fold of peritoneum sometimes seen connecting the duodenum with the body-wall. — mes" o-du" o-de'-nal, a. — mes"o-ep"i-did'y-mis, n. The fold of serous membrane (tunica vaginalis) that unites the epididymis to the scrotum. — mes"o-gas'ter, n. 1. The small intestine and its annexes in the embryo. 2. The mesogastrium. — mes"o-gas'tral, a. — mes"o-gas'tric, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or situated in the mesogaster or the mesogastrium. 2. Crust. Of, pertaining to, or situated in the middle gastric lobe of the carapace. — mes"o-gas'tri-um, n. 1. The fold of serous membrane attaching the stomach to the body-walls in the fetus. 2. The region about the umbilicus. — mes"o-glœ'a, n. 1. Zool. The mesoderm of sponges and actinarians. 2. [M-] Bot. Typical genus of Mesogloiaceæ. — Mes"o-glœ-a'ce-æ, n. pl. An order of gelatinous or cartilaginous olive-brown seaweeds, class Phæosporeæ, forming slimy tufts on larger seaweeds. — mes"o-glœ-a'ceous, a. — mes"o-glœ'al, a. 1. Zool. Of or pertaining to the mesoglœa. 2. Bot. Of, pertaining to, or resembling the genus Mesoglœa or the Mesogloiaceæ. — mes"o-glu-te'us, n. The middle one of the large muscles of the buttock; the gluteus medius. mes"o-glu-tæ'us‡. — mes"o-glu-te'al, a. — mes"-og-na'thi-on, n. An external premaxillary bone, described by Albrecht, that carries the lateral incisors on either side. See illus. under INTERMAXILLARY BONE. — mes-og'na-thous, a. Having moderately projecting jaws; specifically, in craniometry, having a facial angle of 83° to 90°, and a gnathic index of 98 to 103: said of a skull. mes"og-nath'ic‡. — mes" og-na'thi-a, n. — mes-og'na-thism, n. — mes-og'na-thy, n. — mes"o-he'par, n. The fold of peritoneum that connects the liver with the abdominal wall. — mes"o-hip'pus, n. A small fossil (Miocene) 3-toed horse-like mammal (genus Mesohippus). — mes'o-labe, n. A mechanical contrivance consisting of a set of rectangles that slide over one another, by which the roots of quantities may be ascertained: invented by Eratosthenes, 200 B. C. — mes'ole, n. Mineral. Thomsonite. — mes'o-lite (XIII), n. Mineral. A vitreous, colorless or white, fragile, transparent to translucent zeolite, crystallizing in the monoclinic system. — mes'o-lobe, n. [Rare.] The corpus callosum. — mes" o-lo'bar, a. — mes"o-log'a-rithm†, n. A logarithm either of the cosine or cotangent. — mes"o-log'ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to environment in its effects on organisms or races. — mes-ol'o-gy, n. The study of environment in its effects on organisms or races. — mes-ol'o-gist, n. — mes"o-meg-ac'ra-nous, a. Craniom. Having a capacity, in males, of 1,510 to 1,950 cubic centimeters; in females, of 1,410 to 1,730 cubic centimeters: said of a skull. — mes"o-meg-a-pros'o-pous, a. Craniom. Having a capacity of the face, in males, of 580 to 640 cubic centimeters; in females, of 480 to 530 cubic centimeters: said of a skull. — mes"o-men'tal, a. Of, pertaining to, or situated in the middle of the omentum. — mes'o-mere, n. A protovertebra. — mes"o-me-tri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the body of the womb. — mes"o-me'tri-um, n. The fold of the peritoneum that supports the uterus; the broad ligament. mes'o-me"try‡. — mes"o-me'tric, a. — mes'o-mu'le, n. That form of the embryo of an animal that consists of a collection of mesenchyme between two primary gum-layers. — Mes"o-my-o'di, n. pl. Ornith. A division of passerine birds with the intrinsic muscles of the voice-organ affixed at or near the middle of the bronchial semi-rings: including the non-singing passerine birds, as kingbirds. — mes"o-my-o'di-an. I. a. Having the intrinsic muscles of the voice-organ affixed at or near the middle of the bronchial semi-rings. mes"o-my-o'dous‡. II. n. A mesomyodian bird. — mes"o-na'sal, a. Of, pertaining to, or situated in the middle portion of the nasal region. — mes"o-neph'ric, a. Of or pertaining to the mesonephros or mesonephron. — mes"o-neph'ron, n. 1. A fold of peritoneum, sometimes seen, by which the kidney is attached to the body-wall. 2. The mesonephros. — mes"o-neph'ros, n. The middle one of three tubular organs found in connection with the primitive genito-urinary apparatus and formed later than the pronephros; the mid-kidney or Wolffian body. It is the permanent kidney in some animals, as amphibians. — mes"o-no'tum, n. Entom. The dorsal surface of the mesothorax. — mes"o-no'tal, a. — Mes"o-nych'i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. An Eocene family of creodonts with terminal phalanges deeply fissured and blunt claws. Mes'o-nyx, n. (t. g.) — mes"o-nych'id, n. — mes-on'y-choid, a. — mes"o-par-ap'te-ron, n. [-RA, pl.] Entom. The mesothoracic parapteron. — mes"o-par-ap'te-ral, a. — mes"o-phle-bi'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the middle coat in veins. — mes"o-phlœ'um, n. Bot. The middle layer of the bark of exogens; the green bark, the most conspicuous in the young shoot. — mes'o-phragm, n. Entom. An internal chitinous prolongation of the metapræscutum of an insect, affording attachment to some of the wing-muscles. mes"o-phrag'ma‡. — mes"o-phrag'mal, a. — mes-oph'ry-on, n. Anat. The glabella. — mes'o-phyl, n. The soft, inner parenchymatous tissue of a leaf; the cellular portion lying between the upper and the lower epidermis. mes'o-phyll‡; mes"o-phyl'lum‡. — mes"o-phyl'lic, a. Bot. Being in the middle of a leaf or frond. COOKE Fresh-Water Algæ p. 329. — mes-op'ic, a. Having a face of moderate breadth across the malar bones, as the negroid races. — mes'o-plast, n. A cell-nucleus. — mes"o-plas'tic, a. — mes"o-plas'-tron, n. Herp. A plate of the chelonian carapace between the hyoplastron and hypoplastron. — mes"o-plas'tral, a. — mes"o-pleu'ron, n. Entom. The lateral surface of the mesothorax. — mes"o-pleu'ral, a. — mes-op'lo-dont, a. Having a tooth in the middle of each side of the lower jaw, as certain ziphioid whales (genus Mesoplodon). — mes"o-po'di-al. I. a. Of or pertaining to a mesopodiale or mesopodium. II. n. A mesopodiale. — mes"o-po"di-a'le, n. [-LI-A, pl.] One of the bones constituting the third segment of a limb, as those of the wrist or ankle. — mes"o-po'di-um, n. Conch. The middle portion of the foot, as in gastropods and pteropods. — mes"o-post"scu-tel'lum, n. Entom. The postscutellum of the mesonotum. — mes"o-post-scu'tel-lar, a. — mes"o-præ-scu'tum, n. Entom. The præscutum of the mesonotum. — mes"o-præ-scu'-tal, a. — mes"o-pro-sop'ic, a. Having a face of average width. — mes"op-sy'che, n. The mesencephalon. — mes"op-te-ryg'i-um, n. The middle one of the three basal elements of a pectoral fin, as in sharks. — mes"op-te-ryg'i-al, a. — mes"op-ter'y-goid. I. a. Situated at the middle of the pterygoid bone; as, a mesopterygoid process. II. n. A mesopterygoid element. — mes"-o-pyc'ni, n. pl. In medieval music, modes based on a tetrachord whose half-tone is in the middle. — mes-or'-chi-um, n. Embryol. The peritoneal fold that attaches the testis to the body-wall. — mes-or'chi-al, a. — mes"-o-rec'tum, n. Embryol. The fold of peritoneum that encloses the rectum. — mes"o-rec'tal, a. — mes"o-ret'i-na, n. The middle portion of the retina, consisting of the rod-and-cone and the nuclear layers. — mes"o-rhi'nal, a. Situated between the nostrils. — mes'o-rhin(e, a. Having a nose of medium width; specifically, in craniometry, having a nasal index between 48 and 53. mes"o-rhin'i-an‡. — mes"o-rhin'i-a, n. Medium width of nose. — mes"o-rhin'i-um, n. Ornith. That part of the beak between the nostrils. — mes"o-sal'pinx, n. The fold of the peritoneum (part of the broad ligament) that attaches the oviduct to the body-wall. — Mes"o-sau'ri-a, n. pl. Herp. The Mosasauria. — Mes"o-sau'ri-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A Carboniferous family of progonosaurian reptiles with an elongate skull, numerous sharp slender teeth, and no claws. Mes"o-sau'rus, n. (t. g.) — mes"o-sau'-rid, n. — mes"o-sau'roid, a. & n. — mes"o-scap'u-la, n. The middle portion or spine of the scapula. — mes"o-scap'u-lar, a. — mes"o-sce'o-cele, n. Pathol. Perineal hernia. — mes"o-scu-tel'lum, n. Entom. The scutellum of the mesonotum. — mes"o-scu'tel-lar, a. — mes"o-scu'tum, n. Entom. The scutum of the mesonotum. — mes"o-scu'tal, a. — mes'o-seme, a. Having orbits of the eyes that are of medium dimensions; specifically, in craniometry, having an orbital index between 84 and 89. — mes"o-se'mi-a, n. — mes"o-sid'-er-ite, n. A variety of meteorite. — mes"o-sig'moid, n. The fold of peritoneum that is attached to the sigmoid flexure of the colon. — mes'o-some, n. Conch. The middle region of the body of a bivalve. mes"o-so'-ma‡. — mes"o-so-mat'ic, a. — mes'o-sperm, n. An intermediate layer in the testa of some seeds; sarcoderm. — mes'o-spore, n. Bot. The middle membrane of the coat of a spore when it is possible to differentiate three. mes"o-spo'ri-um‡. — mes" o-spo'ric, a. — mes"o-staph'y-lin(e, a. Having a palate of medium width; specifically, in craniometry, having a palatal index of 80.1 to 85. — mes" o-staph"y-lin'i-a, n. — mes'o-state, n. A product of a metabolic process; an anastate or a catastate. — mes"o-ster'nal, a. Of or pertaining to the mesosternum. — mes" o-ster'ne-ber, n. One of the segments of the gladiolus or body of the sternum. mes"-o-ster'ne-bræ‡. — mes"o-ster'ne-bral, a. — mes"-o-ster'num, n. 1. The middle portion of the sternum; the gladiolus of human anatomy. 2. Entom. The ventral sclerite of the mesothorax. — mes"o-ste'thi-um, n. Entom. The metepisternum. — Mes"o-stom'i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of rhabdocœlous worms having the pharynx complicated, mouth submedian, and efferent duct of ovary serving as a chamber for semen. Mes-os'to-ma, n. (t. g.) Mes"o-stom'i-dæ‡. — mes"o-stom'id, n. — mes-os'to-moid, a. — mes"o-sty'lous, a. Same as MID-STYLED. — Mes"o-su'chi-a, n. pl. Herp. A division of crocodilians with amphicœlous vertebræ. — mes"o-su'chi-an, a. & n. — mes"o-su'chi-ous, a. — mes"o-tar'sus, n. Entom. The tarsus of the second or middle leg. — mes"o-tar-tar'ic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a variety of tartaric acid. — mesotartaric acid, an isomeric variety of tartaric acid that does not deflect the plane of polarization to either side. — mes"o-ten'don, n. A fold of synovial membrane that passes to a tendon from the wall of a synovial sheath. — mes"o-the'ca, n. Zoöph. The middle of three laminæ of a hydroid perigonium. — mes"o-the'ci-um, n. Bot. A layer of comparatively high cells with annular thickenings, formed immediately beneath the epidermis of the wall of a pollen-sac; the so-called fibrous layer. — mes"o-the'li-um, n. The portion of the mesoderm that produces the peritoneum, the pleura, and the striated muscles. — mes"-o-the'li-al, a. — mes'o-therm, n. A plant of De Candolle's third physiological group, requiring only a moderate degree of heat, from 59° to 68° Fahr. The Messianic import of this Psalm [the second] has been acknowledged even by those who usually deny such references.
H. ALFORD Greek Testament, Acts iv, 25.

Mes″si-dor′, mā′si-dōr′ (mes′si-dōr′, C.; mes′i-dôr, W.; mē′si-dor′, W.[1]), n. [F.] The tenth month in the calendar of the first French republic. See CALENDAR.

mes-sieurs′, mes-syū′ or mesh′yŭrz (XIII), n. pl. Sirs; gentlemen: in English in the contracted form Messrs., as plural of Mr. [F., pl. of monsieur; see MONSIEUR.]

mes′sin, mes′in. [Scot.] I. a. Curtish. II. n. A common or mongrel dog. mes′san†; mes′set;.

Mes″si-nese′, mes′i-nēz′ or -nēs′, a. Of or pertaining to Messina, Sicily, or its inhabitants. Mes″si-nese′, n. mes′s-kit″, etc. See MESS[1], n.

mess′mate″, mes′māt′. n. 1. An associate at a mess, especially on board a ship.

The dog and the cat were her messmates. Cosette ate with them under the table, in a wooden dish like theirs. HUGO Les Miserables tr. by C. E. Wilbour Fantine ch. 3, p. 92. [C. & CO.]

2. Zool. A commensal. 3. Bot. The messmate-tree.

—mess′mate″-tree″, n. The common stringy-bark tree (Eucalyptus obliqua) of Tasmania and Australia, growing to a height of 330 feet and a diameter of 10 feet.

mes′suage, mes′wēj, n. Law. A dwelling-house, especially one with its adjacent outbuildings, garden, curtilage, and other usual appendages. [< OF. messuage, < LL. mansionaticum, manor-house, < L. mansio(n-); see MANSION.] mes′uage†.

mess′y, mes′i, a. Being in a condition of dirt or confusion, or tending to such a condition; disorderly or disordered; untidy; mussy; as, messy work; a messy room.

ment†, a. Most. meste†.

PHIL. SOC.

mes-tee′, mes-tē′, n. [W. Ind.] The offspring of a white person and a quadroon. [Contr. of MESTIZO.] mus-tee′;. mes-te′ño, mes-tē′nyō, n. [Sp.] A horse of mixed breed used for herding: corrupted into mustang.

Mes′ter†, n. Master. See MISTER[1], n.

mest′ful†, a. Sad, melancholy; dismal. mest′full.

mes-ti′zo, mes-tī′zō, n. Any one of mixed blood; specifically, in Mexico and the western United States, a person of mixed Spanish and Indian blood. Compare CREOLE; MULATTO.

Nearly half the population of Mexico are mestizos, who are the farmers and rancheros, the muleteers and servants.

—mestizo wool, South-American wool from mixed breeds of sheep. Called also River Plate wool.

mest′ling†, n. Same as MASLIN.

mes′tome, mes′tōm, n. The elements, collectively, composing a fibrovascular bundle in plants.

The physiological considerations which occasion the separation of a fibro-vascular bundle into Hadrome and Leptome, have led to the choice of the term Mestome for the entire bundle. E. STRASBURGER Pract. Bot. tr. by W. Hillhouse, ch. 8, p. 86. [MACM. '89.]

[< Gr. mestōma, fulness, < mestoō, full.] mes′tom‡.

mes-ym′ni-cum, mes-im′ni-cum, n. Anc. Pros. A repetition at the end of a stanza. [< MES- + Gr. hymnos, hymn.]

mes-ym′ni-on, mes-im′ni-en, n. A short interpolated rhythmical member, particularly in a hymn. Compare EPHYMNIUM; METHYMNION; PROYMNION. [< Gr. mesymnion, < mesos, middle, + hymnos, hymn.]

met[2]†, imp. of METE[2], v. Dreamed.

met, n. [Prov. Brit.] Any measure; a bushel; a barrel.

meta-, } mean 'between, with, after, over, reversely'; (2) meth-, } (Chem.) to denote (a) resemblance, (b) that an oxygen acid has been formed from the ortho-acid by withdrawing one, two, or three molecules of water, or (c) that the two radicals which replace hydrogen in the benzene nucleus are considered as attached to alternate carbon atoms. [< L. meta-, < Gr. meta-, < meta, between, after, reversely.]

me′ta, mī′tə or mē′tə, n. [ME′TÆ, mī′tī or mē′tē, pl.] [L.] A semicircular base bearing three pillars, typically conical, marking one end of the spina or central barrier, around which competitors in the Roman circus had to drive, usually seven times.

met-ab′a-sis, met-ab′ə-sis, n. 1. Med. (1) A transformation in the nature of a disease during its progress. (2) A change of medicine or of medical practise in the treatment of a disease. 2. Rhet. The act of passing from one subject to another. [< Gr. metabasis, change, < meta, beyond, + bainō, pass.]

met″a-bat′ic, met″ə-bat′ik, a. Pertaining to the transmission of energy, especially in the form of heat, from one body to another. [< Gr. metabatikos, < metabasis; see METABASIS.]

met-ab′o-la[1], met-ab′ə-lə, n. Same as METABASIS, 1. [< Gr. metabolē, change, < meta, beyond, + ballō, throw.] met-ab′o-le†; met″a-bo′li-a‡.

Met-ab′o-la[2], n. pl. Entom. A section of insects that manifest complete metamorphosis, including Coleoptera, Hymenoptera, Diptera, and Lepidoptera. [< Gr. metabolos, changeable, < meta, beyond, + ballō, throw.]

met″a-bol′ic, met″ə-bol′ik, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or exhibiting metabolism; as, metabolic processes. 2. Entom. Of or pertaining to the Metabola. 3. Pathol. Pertaining to change or transformation in a disease; as, metabolic action.

met-ab′o-lism, met-ab′ə-lizm, n. 1. Biol. The act or process by which on the one hand the dead food is built up into living matter, and by which on the other the living matter is broken down into simpler products within a cell or organism; the sum of the anabolic or constructive (assimilation) and the catabolic or destructive (decomposition) processes. 2. Entom. Metamorphosis. 3. Theol. A view concerning the eucharist, held by some of the early fathers, standing midway between transubstantiation and the symbolical view. 4. In poetry, a change from one meter to another. met-ab′o-ly‡.

—met-ab′o-lite, n. Biol. A product of metabolism, as urea in an animal, carbon dioxid and water in a plant. —met-ab′o-lize, vt. To subject to or change by metabolism.

met-ab′o-lous, a. Entom. Same as METABOLIC, 2.

met″a-bran′chi-al, met″ə-bran′ki-əl, a. Crust. Covering the posterior part of the branchial chamber, as a lobe of the carapace of a crab.

met″a-brush′ite, met″ə-brush′īt, n. Mineral. A pale-yellow, translucent to transparent, hydrous calcium phosphate ($H_2Ca_2P_2O_{11}$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system. [< META- + BRUSHITE.]

Met″a-can′thi-dæ, met″ə-can′thi-dē or -dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of heteropterous insects. Met″a-can′thus, n. (t. g.) [< META- + Gr. kanthos, corner of the eye.] —met″a-can′thid, a. & n. —met″a-can′thoid, a.

met″a-car′pal, met″ə-cär′pəl. I. a. Of or pertaining to the metacarpus. II. n. One of the bones of the metacarpus. See illus. under CARPUS and HOOF.

met″a-car-pa′le, met″ə-cär-pē′lē or -pə′lē, n. [-LI-A, pl.] A metacarpal.

met″a-car′pus, met″ə-cär′pus, n. The part of the fore or thoracic limb between the carpus or wrist and the phalanges or bones of the finger. It consists in man of five bones. [< META- + Gr. karpos, wrist.]

—met″a-car′po-pha-lan′ge-al, a. Of or pertaining to the metacarpus and the phalanges; as, the metacarpophalangeal articulation.

met″a-cel′lu-lose, met″ə-sel′yu-lōs, n. Fungus-cellulose. Called also fungin.

met″a-cen′ter, } met″ə-sen′tər, n. Hydrostatics. That met″a-cen′tre, } point in a floating body slightly displaced from equilibrium through which the resultant upward pressure of the fluid always passes; specifically, in ship-building, the intersection of a line drawn vertically through the center of buoyancy of a vessel in equilibrium and the vertical line passing through the center of buoyancy when the vessel is slightly listed. center of cavity‡.

Metacenter of a Vessel.

g, center of gravity; b, center of buoyancy when vessel is upright, b′, center of buoyancy when she is listed as shown; m, metacenter for this particular list, for lists of less than 15° the position of m does not vary appreciably; m g, metacentric height, g z, righting-lever, or purchase of the force of buoyancy acting upward through b′b.

The equilibrium of a floating body is stable or unstable according as the metacentre is above or below the centre of gravity.
GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, ¶ 115, p. 103. [W. W. '90.]

[< F. métacentre, < Gr. meta, beyond, + kentron, center.]

—met″a-cen′tric, a. Pertaining to the metacenter.

—metacentric height, the distance of a vessel's metacenter above the center of gravity. The less it is, the nearer the vessel approaches instability, but the more slowly she rolls, the force tending to right her being less.

met-ac′e-tone, met-as′ə-tōn, n. Chem. A colorless liquid isomeric with acetone formed when sugar is distilled with lime; now regarded as a mixture.

met″a-chlo′ral, met″ə-clō′ral, n. Chem. A white amorphous solid compound (C_3Cl_3HO) formed when chloral is allowed to stand with sulfuric acid.

met"a-cho-re'sis, met"ą-co-rē'sis or -rē'sis, n. [Gr.] Med. Same as METASTASIS.

met-ach'ro-nism, met-ac'ro-nizm, n. A chronological error consisting in assigning too late a date to an event. [< Gr. metachronos, after the time, < meta, beyond, — chronos, time.

met"a-chro'sis, met"ą-crō'sis, n. The power of changing color at will, as in certain lizards, etc. [< META- + Gr. chrōsis, coloring, < chroa, color.]

met"a-cin'na-bar-ite, met"ą-sin ą-bār ait, n. Mineral. A metallic, grayish-black, brittle mercuric sulfid (HgS), crystallizing in the isometric system. [< META- + CINNABAR.]

met'a-cism, n. Same as MYTACISM.

met'a-cœle, met'ą-sil, n. The metacœlia. See illus. under CEREBRAL VESICLE.

met"a-cœ'li-a, met"ą-sī'li-ą or -cēi'li-ą, n. The posterior portion of the fourth ventricle of the brain, corresponding to the cavity of the fifth cerebral vesicle. [< META- + Gr. koilia, belly, < koilos, hollow.]

— met"a-cœ'li-an, a.

met"a-cœ'lom, met"ą-sī'lem or -cēi'lom, n. Embryol. The part of the primitive body-cavity that becomes the pleuroperitoneal cavity. [< META- + Gr. koilos, hollow.]

met"a-con'dyle, met"ą-cen'dil, n. [Rare.] The phalanx of a digit that bears the nail.

met'a-cone, met'ą-cōn, n. The postero-external cusp of the upper molar teeth of a mammal. [< META- + Gr. kōnos, cone.]

met"a-con'id, met"ą-cen'id, n. The intermediate, or, in quadritubercular molars, the antero-internal, cusp of a lower molar tooth of a mammal.

met"a-con'ule, met"ą-cen'yūl, n. The posterior intermediate cusp of an upper molar tooth of a mammal.

met"a-cre'sol, met"ą-crī'sōl, n. Chem. A liquid phenol (C_7H_8O), one of the three isomers contained in coal-tar cresol.

met"a-cro'le-in, met"ą-crō'lę-in, n. Chem. A volatile crystalline aromatic compound (C_3H_4O) formed by treating acrolein hydrochlorid with potassium hydroxid.

met"a-cro'mi-on, met"ą-crō'mi-en, n. [-MI-A, pl.] The backward process of the acromion of the scapula, as in certain rodents. — met"a-cro'mi-al, a.

met"a-cyc'lic, met"ą-sic'lic, a. Pertaining to the permutation of a set of elements in one cycle.

met"a-cy-e'sis, met"ą-sui-ī'sis or -cī-ē'sis, n. Pathol. A form of extra-uterine pregnancy in which the fetus, after being in the womb, is found elsewhere. [< META- + Gr. kyēsis, conception.]

met"a-der"ma-to'sis, met"ą-dęr"mą-tō'sis, n. Pathol. Morbid cutaneous development. [< META- + Gr. derma, skin.]

met"a-dis-coi'dal, met"ą-dis-cei'dal, a. Resembling a discoidal form, but more developed: specifically said of the placenta of man and apes.

me'tæ, mī'tī or mē'tē, n. Plural of META.

met"æs-thet'ic, -thet'ism. Same as METESTHETIC, etc.

met"a-fa'cial, met"ą-fē'shial, a. Situated behind the face; as, the metafacial angle. See CRANIOMETRY.

met"a-fys'ics, n. Metaphysics. PHIL. SOC.

met"a-gas'ter, met"ą-gas'tęr, n. The differentiated or secondary intestine of a vertebrate. [< META- + Gr. gastēr, belly.] — met"a-gas'tral, a.

met"a-gas'tric, met"ą-gas'tric, a. Of, pertaining to, or designating two posterior lobes of the carapace of a crab. [< META- + GASTRIC.]

met"a-gas'tru-la, met"ą-gas'tru-lą, n. A secondary or modified gastrula resulting from a kenogenetic egg-cleavage, as an amphigastrula, discogastrula, or perigastrula.

me'tage, mī'tĵ, n. Measurement; also, the price charged for measurement: a general term for the tolls formerly exacted by the corporation of London over a part of the Thames above and below the city. [< METE[1], v.] met"a-gel'a-tin, met"ą-jel'ą-tin, n. A modification of gelatin so prepared that it remains fluid; used in photography as a preservative. met"a-gel'a-tine‡.

met"a-gen'e-sis, met"ą-jen'ę-sis, n. Biol. 1. A kind of alternation of generations in which a series of generations of unlike forms come between the egg and the parent type.

Metagenesis . . . is contradistinguished from metamorphosis in which those changes are undergone by the individual.
K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 765. [SH. & CO. '78.]

2. Development of an embryo into an organism unlike the parent, as in alternation of generations: opposed to monogenesis. [< META- + GENESIS.]

— met"a-ge-net'ic, a. Relating to metagenesis. met"a-gen'ic‡. — met"a-ge-net'ic-al-ly, adv.

met"a-ge"o-met'ric-al, met"ą-jī"ō-met'ric-al, a. Being beyond the conceptions and explanations of ordinary geometry.

They construct a theory which lands us in the remotest regions of transcendentalism — in the realms of a metageometrical space.
J. B. STALLO Concepts of Modern Physics ch. 13, p. 214. [A. '82.]

met-ag'na-thous, met-ag'ną-thus, a. Having the points of the mandibles crossing each other, as in the crossbill. [< META- + Gr. gnathos, jaw.]

met"ag-nos'tic, met"ag-nes'tic, a. Beyond the knowledge whether of the sense or the understanding of man as at present constituted; metaphysical.

met"ag-nos'tic, n. [Recent.] One who holds that there is a Supreme Being, but that he transcends knowledge: proposed as a substitute for agnostic in its theistic sense, to avoid ambiguity. [< META- + GNOSTIC.]

met"ag-nos'ti-cism, met"ag-nos'ti-sizm, n. [Recent.] Philos. The doctrine that there is a positive knowledge of the Absolute attained, not by the logical reason, but by a higher religious consciousness: introduced in opposition to the negations of agnosticism.

met"ag-nos'tics, met"ag-nos'tics, n. Metaphysics, as going beyond ordinary knowledge: philosophy.

met"a-gram'ma-tism, n. Same as ANAGRAMMATISM.

met'a-graph, met'ą-grąf, n. An instrument used in craniometry for making an orthographic projection of points lying within the cranium. [< META- + -GRAPH.]

met-ag'ra-phy, met-ag'rą-fi, n. The act or process of expressing the words of a language by means of the alphabetic characters of another language; transliteration. [< Gr. metagraphō, write differently, < meta, beyond, + graphō, write.] — met"a-graph'ic, a.

me-tai'rie, mę-tē'ri, n. A piece of land cultivated on shares. [< F. métairie, < métayer; see METAYER.]

met"a-ki-ne'sis, met"ą-ki-nī'sis or -nē'sis, n. Embryol. That stage of indirect cell-division in which the nuclear filaments separate and diverge toward opposite poles of the cell. See illus. under KARYOKINESIS. [< META- + Gr. kinēsis, movement.]

met'al, met'ąl (XIII), vt. [MET'ALED or MET'ALLED; MET'AL-ING or MET'AL-LING.] Civ. Engin. To cover, as a road, with broken stone.

met'al, n. 1. An element that forms a base by combining with oxygen, is usually hard, generally heavy, lustrous, malleable, ductile, tenacious, and a good conductor of heat and electricity.

The six metals known to the ancients were gold, silver, copper, tin, iron, and lead, and their properties gave shape to the idea of a metal. Mercury, owing to its fluidity, was not originally accepted as a metal; but when it was found that if frozen it became hard and malleable its metallic character was admitted. Later, the isolation of the bases of the alkaline earths introduced among the metals elements that were not heavy, so that an exact scientific definition is impossible, and the word is used chiefly as an arbitrary designation of certain elements. The alchemists believed in the existence of seven metals, corresponding to the seven movable planets, and gave them symbols similar to those used for the planets. So iron was called "Mars," and silver "Luna," etc. Many of the so-called metals, as Aich's metal, bell-metal, gun-metal, music-metal, plate-metal, pot-metal, queen's metal, and type-metal, are alloys, for which no exact composition can be given, as the proportions of their ingredients differ in special cases. See ALLOY.

2. Something composed of one or more of the metallic elements, or supposed to resemble them. (1) An alloy: generally with an adjective, or the name of the inventor; as, Aich's metal; Britannia metal. (2) Founding. Cast iron, more particularly while melted. (3) Civ. Engin. Broken stone for road-surfaces or for railway-ballast. (4) Glass-making. Molten glass. (5) Naut. The weight of solid shot that a vessel's guns can throw at once. (6) pl. [Colloq.] Railway-rails. (7) Metalliferous ore. (8) Her. Gold or silver tincture.

In English Heraldry the Tinctures comprise Two Metals, Five Colours, and Eight Furs.
BOUTELL English Heraldry ch. 5, p. 40. [R. & T. '79.]

3. The constituent material of anything; essential quality; as, he is of finer metal than his companions.

And if thou hast the metal of a king.
SHAKESPEARE King John act ii, sc. 2.

4†. Mettle. 5†. A mine of metallic ore. [OF., < L. metallum, < Gr. metallon, perhaps orig. 'ore' (< meta, with, + allos, other), substance combined with others; perhaps 'mine' (< metallaō, explore, < meta, after, + allos, other), place explored.]

Compounds, etc.: — alkaline metals, those metals whose oxids combine with water to form alkalis, as lithium, sodium, potassium, rubidium, and cesium, and the hypothetical element ammonium. — antifriction metal, any alloy having a low coefficient of friction, used for bearing-surfaces. — Babbitt m., a soft white antifriction metal of tin, copper, and antimony. — base m., one not of the noble metals; particularly, lead, copper, iron, and zinc. — coarse m., an iron-and-copper matte containing sulfur: a product of copper-smelting in a reverberatory furnace. — gathered m., laded metal. — laded m., molten glass dipped from a melting-pot to a casting-table. — light m., a metal or alloy having a density of less than five times that of water, as aluminum, potassium, etc. — met'al-bath", n. A bath, as of mercury or tin, employed for chemical processes requiring great heat. — m.-wheel, n. Metal-working. A lap-wheel; a lap. — noble m., a metal that does not readily oxidize in the open air, as gold, silver, and platinum. — pig m., metal in pigs, as iron from a smelting-furnace. — white m., the product of the fourth stage of the English method of smelting copper ores.

met"al-am-mo'ni-um, met"ąl-am-mō'ni-um, n. Chem. A hypothetical radical formed by substituting atoms of a metal for those of hydrogen in ammonium.

met"al-bu'min, met'ąl-biū'min, n. Chem. A variety of albumin found in certain serous fluids. Called also chlorid substance, pseudo-mucin.

met-al'de-hyde, met-al'dę-hoid, n. Chem. A polymeric modification of ethyl aldehyde, $(C_2H_4O)_3$, that crystallizes when ethyl aldehyde is treated with sulfuric acid while cooled in a freezing-mixture.

met'aled, met'ąld, a. 1. Civ. Engin. (1) Surfaced with stone; macadamized: said of an ordinary road. (2) Stone-ballasted: said of a railway. 2†. High-spirited; fiery; ardent; mettled. met'alled‡.

met"a-lep'sis, met"ą-lep'sis, n. 1. Rhet. A compound figure that consists in uniting two or more different tropes in the same word, or in so using a word as to suggest two or three different figures by it. 2. The assuming or changing one thing or term for another; in Aristotelian logic, the change of a term from the subject of a hypothetical to the subject of a categorical proposition. met"a-lep'sy‡. [L., < Gr. metalēpsis, alternation, < meta, among, + lambanō, take.]

met'a-lep"sy, met'ą-lep'si, n. 1. Chem. Substitution, as the replacing or exchange of one or more radicals or groups in a compound by others. Called also metathesis. 2. Same as METALEPSIS, 2. [< Gr. metalēpsis; see METALEPSIS.]

met"a-lep'tic, met"ą-lep'tic, a. 1. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or caused by metalepsy. 2. Rhet. Of or pertaining to metalepsis. 3. Having to do with any act of participation; translative. 4. Transverse. [< Gr. metalēptikos, capable of partaking, < meta, among, + lambanō, take.] met"a-lep'tic-al‡.

met'al-in(e, met'ąl-in or -in, n. 1. A twisted thread made of strands of wire and linen: for sewing leather. 2. Mech. A mixture of graphite and antifriction metal for antifriction bearings: used in the form of plugs inserted into holes. [< METAL.] met'al-line‡.

met'al-ing, met'ąl-ing, n. Road-surfacing or ballast of broken stone.

met'al-ist, n. Same as METALLIST.

met"al-la'ce-æ, met"ąl-ē'sę-ī or -ę'ce-ē, n. pl. Chem. A group or class of elements proposed by T. Sterry Hunt: embracing the metals and semi-metals with sulfur, selenium, phosphorus, and arsenic, and all their compounds with one another. [< L. metallum, METAL.]

met"al-lax'is, met"ą-lax'is, n. The replacement of two phonic elements by one that is intermediate. HALDEMAN Analytic Orthography ch. 11, p. 57. [L. '60.] [< Gr. metallaxis, change, < meta, between, + allassō, change.]

met"al-le'i-ty, met"ąl-ī'ti, n. Same as METALLICITY.

met-al'lic, met-al'ic, a. 1. Being, containing, or having characteristics of a metal; as, a metallic mineral.

In order to keep large sums of metallic money in safety a person must have strongholds and watchmen. W. S. JEVONS Money and Mechanism pt. ii, ch. 16, p. 200. [K. & CO. '75.]

2. Pertaining to or produced by or as by a metal; as, a metallic sound; a metallic luster.

It was a still, clear, freezing night, when the least sound clinked with a metallic resonance.
HARRIET B. STOWE Poganuc People ch. 4, p. 42. [F. H. & H. '78.]

— met-al'lic-al-ly, adv. As, in point of, or by means of metal; in a metallic manner. met-al'lic-ly‡.

met"al-li'cian, met'ąl-ish'ion, n. [Slang.] A bookmaker at the races: so called from the metallic books and pencils used by persons of this class.

met-al-lic'i-ty, met'ąl-is'i-ti, n. The quality of being a metal or metallic. met"al-le'i-ty‡.

met"al-li-fac'ture, met'ąl-i-fac'chur or -tiūr, n. [Rare.] The act or process of manufacturing metals. [< L. metallum (see METAL) + factura, a making, < facio, make.]

met"al-lif'er-ous, met'ąl-if'ęr-us, a. Containing or yielding metal; as, metalliferous deposits. [< L. metallum (see METAL) + fero, bear.]

met-al'li-form, met-al'i-fōrm, a. Of the form or nature of metals. [< L. metallum (see METAL) + -FORM.]

met-al'li-fy, met-al'i-fai, vt. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] Metal. To make into metal, or to produce in metallic form. [< L. metallum (see METAL) + -FY.]

met-al'li-kon, met-al'i-ken, n. [Gr.] Arch. A surface-decoration consisting of glass plates on which are cemented ornaments of glass, terra-cotta, etc.: used chiefly in England.

met'al-lin(e, met'ąl-in, C. (-ain, E. I. W. Wr.), a. Relating to, having the properties of, or resembling metal; containing or consisting of metal.

The metalline species . . . including unoxydized metals and their compounds with one another, and with arsenic, antimony, bismuth, sulphur, selenium and tellurium. T. S. HUNT Systematic Mineralogy ch. 6, p. 73. [SCI. PUB. CO. '92.]

met'al-list, met'ąl-ist, n. 1. One who works in or has special knowledge of metals. 2. An advocate of metallic money as against a paper currency. 3. One who is familiar with laws governing and who favors the issuance and circulation of metallic money, as opposed to paper money. met'al-ist‡.

met'al-lize, met'ąl-aiz, vt. [-LIZED; -LI'ZING.] 1, To turn into a metal; infuse mineral or metallic particles into, as the pores of wood. 2†. To treat with sulfur and heat, as india-rubber; vulcanize. met'al-lise‡.

— met"al-li-za'tion, met"al-li-sa'tion, n.

metallo-, metall-. Derived from Greek metallon, METAL: combining forms. — met-al'lo-chrome, n. Elec. A prismatic-colored deposit on a metal, as polished steel, by electrolysis of a lead salt. Called also Nobili's rings. — met"al-lo-chro"my, C. (met-tal'lo-chro"my, W.), n. The art or process of coloring metals. — met"al-lo-dyn'i-a, n. Pathol. Pain caused by metallic poisoning, as from lead or mercury. — met-al'lo-phone, n. 1. A kind of piano having graduated metal bars in place of strings. 2. A musical instrument differing from the xylophone in having metal instead of wooden bars. — met"al-lo-plas'tic, a. Of or pertaining to the art of depositing metal by either chemical or electric means in the production of casts. — met"al-lor-gan'ic, a. Same as METALORGANIC. — met'al-lo-sco"py, n. 1. Morbid manifestations produced by the application of metals to the skin in cases of hysteria. 2. The art of determining, by external application, the action of metals on the system. — met"al-lo-scop'ic, a.

met-al'lo-graph, met-al'o-graf, n. A print produced by metallographic process. — met"al-lo-graph'ic, a. Of or pertaining to metallography. — met"al-log'ra-phist, n. A writer on the science of metals.

met"al-log'ra-phy, met"ąl-og'ra-fi, n. 1. The science that treats of metallic substances; also, a treatise on metals. 2. Print. A process for utilizing metal plates in a manner similar to lithographic stones. 3. A process of reproducing the grain of wood on metals by printing from wooden blocks impregnated with an acid. [< METALLO- + -GRAPHY.]

met'al-loid, met'ąl-oid, a. Chem. 1. Resembling a metal. 2. Of, pertaining to, or having the properties of a metalloid; non-metallic. met"al-loid'al‡.

met'al-loid, n. Chem. One of those non-metallic elements that resemble the metals in some of their properties. The name was given by Berzelius to the inflammable non-metallic elements, as sulfur, phosphorus, and carbon, and subsequently was applied to all non-metallic elements, including oxygen and hydrogen. It is now restricted to those closely resembling metals, as arsenic and antimony.

The remoter planets, with their low density and vast absorbing atmospheres, may be supposed to consist of metalloids like the outer parts of the sun's atmosphere, while the interior planets are no doubt mainly metallic.
ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geology bk. i, p. 8. [MACM. '82.]

met'al-lo-ther"a-py, met'ąl-o-ther'ą-pi, n. Med. The treatment of various nervous diseases, especially of hysteria, by the application of metallic plates, rings, etc., to the surface of the body: a method applied by Dr. Burg, a French physician, which led to the investigations of Dr. Charcot, of Paris, in 1877, and to the subsequent scientific recognition of hypnotism (the modern name of mesmerism). [< METALLO- + Gr. therapeia, medical treatment.] — met'al-lo-ther"a-peu'tic, a.

met'al-lur"gist, met'al-ūr'jist, n. One versed or skilled in the theory and practise of metallurgy.

met'al-lur"gy, met'al-ūr'ji, n. The art or science of economically extracting a metal or metals from ores, as by smelting, reducing, refining, alloying, etc.

The best steel is the greatest triumph of metallurgy, and metallurgy is the glory of chemistry. PHILLIPS in C. Martyn's Wendell Phillips, Lost Arts app., p. 543. [F. & W. '90.]

met"a-log'ic, met'a-loj'ic, n. The philosophy or metaphysics of logic.

met"a-log'ic-al, met'a-loj'ic-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to metalogic. 2. Beyond the sphere of logic.

met"al-or-gan'ic, met'al-ōr-gan'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or consisting of a metal in combination with an organic radical, as zinc ethyl. [< METAL + ORGANIC.] met"al-lor-gan'ic‡.

met"a-math"e-mat'ics, met'a-math'ę-mat'ics, n. The philosophy or metaphysics of mathematics.

met'a-mer, met'a-mėr, n. 1. Chem. A metameric compound. 2. Bot. Same as PHYTOMER.

met'a-mere, met'a-mīr, n. Zool. One of the series of homologous segments that form the body of a vertebrate or articulate animal, as a worm; a homodynamous part; somite; arthromere.

The metameres in the polymorphous colonies are quite analogous to the segments of the individual.
CLAUS Zoology tr. by A. Sedgwick, vol. i, ch. 3, p. 28. [MACM.]

[< META- + Gr. meros, part.] met-am'e-ron‡.

met"a-mer'ic, met'a-mer'ic, a. 1. Chem. Having the property of or possessing metamerism. 2. Zool. Of or pertaining to a metamere; being a metamere.

—met'a-me"ral, met'a-me"rous, a.—met"a-mer'ic-al-ly, adv.

met'a-mer-ism, met'a-mėr-izm, C. (mę-tam'ėr-izm, B. & n.) 1. Chem. A variety of isomerism in which the compounds have not only the same percentage of composition, but also the same molecular weight. 2. Zool. Disposition in metameres; the state of being a metamere. met'a-mer"y‡.

met'a-mer-ize, met'a-mėr-aiz, vt. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] To arrange in metameres.

met"a-mor'fose, -fo'sis. Metamorphose, etc. PH. S.

met"a-mor'phic, met'a-mōr'fic, a. 1. Producing metamorphism; as, a metamorphic agency. 2. Of, pertaining to, or exhibiting metamorphism; metamorphosed.

From the highly metamorphic condition of the oldest sediment, it is possible that no remains may exist of this primeval vegetation. J. W. DAWSON Nature and the Bible lect. iii, p. 105. [C. & BROS. '75.]

met"a-mor'phism, met'a-mōr'fizm, n. 1. Geol. The changes that go on in rocks, due to recrystallization of their constituents, either with or without alteration in the chemical composition of the mass. The most important agents of metamorphism are heat, moisture, or other mineralizing factor, and pressure. These are made active either by intrusion of igneous masses or by dislocations or movements in the earth's crust. Metamorphism may be simple enlargement of mineral grains, as when a sandstone becomes a quartzite; it may be simple recrystallization, as when a limestone becomes a marble; or it may consist in the production of wholly new minerals, as when a clay-slate becomes a garnetiferous mica-schist.

2. Any metamorphosis.

—contact or local metamorphism, metamorphism brought about by and confined to the neighborhood of an intrusive mass of igneous rock. ther'mo-met"a-mor"phism.—dynamic or dynamo m., metamorphism produced by earth-movements in regions of great dislocation, shearing or crushing of rocks.—regional m., metamorphic changes extending over a wide extent.—static m., changes produced largely by pressure, without great shearing or dislocation of the rock-masses.

met"a-mor'phist, met'a-mōr'fist, n. Theol. A believer in the doctrine that the body of Christ on his ascension merged into the Deity.

met"a-mor-phol'o-gy, met'a-mōr-fol'o-ji, n. Biol. The science of the metamorphoses of an organism. [< METAMORPHOSIS + -LOGY.]

met"a-mor-phop'sy, met'a-mōr-fop'si, n. Pathol. False vision; an abnormal condition of the sight in which objects seem irregular or confused, or insects, cobwebs, etc., seem to float before the eye. [< METAMORPHOSIS + Gr. ōps, eye.] met"a-mor-phop'si-a‡.

met"a-mor'pho-scope, met'a-mōr'fo-scōp, n. A panoramic toy in which several bands of differing lengths are made to pass before the observer at slightly varying speeds. If the upper band is painted with heads, the middle band with bodies, and the lower with legs, many grotesque effects are obtained. [< METAMORPHOSIS + -SCOPE.]

met"a-mor'phose, met'a-mōr'fōz, vt. [-PHOSED; -PHO'SING.] 1. To change the form or shape of; cause to assume a different form or character; transmute. 2. Geol. To change by metamorphism. met"a-mor'phize‡, met"a-mor'pho-ser, n.

met"a-mor'pho-sic, met'a-mōr'fo-sic, E. J. W. Wr. (met'a-mōr'fō-sic, C., a. [Rare.] Producing metamorphosis; transformative; pertaining to or descriptive of metamorphosis.

met"a-mor'pho-sis, met'a-mōr'fo-sis, n. [-SES, pl.] 1. A passing from one form or shape into another; transformation with or without change of nature. 2. Chem. Chemical action caused by the presence of a peculiar substance, as a ferment, and resulting in the decomposition of a compound. 3. Biol. A change in form or structure resulting from development; transformation; specifically, the series of marked external changes through which an individual passes after leaving the egg-envelopes and before attaining sexual maturity, as the larva, pupa, and imago of an insect. Compare METAGENESIS. 4. Bot. The change or modification of one organ into another, as stamens into petals, and stamens into pistils. met'a-mor"phy:. 5. Pathol. A morbid change of the elements of tissues into another form of structure; as, cancerous or tubercular metamorphoses. [L., < Gr. metamorphōsis, < meta, over, + morphē, form.] met"a-mor'phose‡.

met"a-mor-phot'ic, met'a-mōr-fot'ic, a. Of the nature of, produced by, or founded upon metamorphosis. met"a-mor-phos'tic-al‡.

met"a-nau'pli-us, met'a-nē'pli-us, n. [-PLI-I, -pli-ai or -i, pl.] Crust. A larval crustacean at a stage between the nauplius and zoea.

met"a-neph'ros, met'a-nef'res, n. Embryol. The posterior one of three similar tubular organs in connection with the genito-urinary apparatus. It develops into the permanent kidney. [< META- + Gr. nephros, kidney.] met"a-neph'ron‡.

met'a-no'tum, met'a-nō'tum, n. Entom. The dorsal surface of the metathorax. [< META- + Gr. nōton, back.] —met"a-no'tal, a.

met-an'ti-mo-nate, met-an'ti-mo-nēt, n. Chem. A salt of metantimonic acid.

met-an"ti-mon'ic, met-an'ti-men'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from antimonic oxid.

—metantimonic acid, a white compound ($H_4Sb_2O_7$) formed by decomposing antimonic chlorid with water.

met"a-par-ap'te-ron, met'a-par-ap'tę-ren, n. [-RA, pl.] Entom. The third sclerite of the metapleuron [< META- + PARAPTERON.] —met"a-par-ap'te-ral, a.

met"a-pec'tin, met'a-pec'tin, n. Chem. A compound derived from pectin by means of dilute acids.

met"a-pep'sis, met'a-pep'sis, n. Geol. Regional metamorphism, due to steam or boiling water under great pressure: a term proposed by G. H. Kinahan. [< META- + Gr. pepsis, cooking, < peptō, cook.]

met"a-pep'tone, met'a-pep'tōn, n. A protein body formed when albumin is digested with pepsin and hydrochloric acid. [< META- + PEPTONE.]

met"a-phe-nom'e-nal, met'a-fę-nem'ę-nal, a. Being or acting behind phenomena; as, powers or laws are metaphenomenal: a Kantian term.

If knowledge consisted in a purely passive receiving of 'ideas,' . . . in this and nothing else, no distinction of phenomena from the metaphenomenal, as objects of knowledge, . . . would ever be made. G. S. MORRIS Kant's Critique ch. 6, p. 189. [S. C. & BROS. '82.]

met-aph'e-ry, met-af'e-ri, n. Bot. The displacement of organs. [< Gr. metapherō, transfer, < meta, over, + pherō, bear.]

met'a-phor, met'a-fėr, n. Rhet. The form of trope that is founded on a resemblance of relations; a figure of speech in which one object is likened to another by asserting it to be that other or speaking of it as if it were that other: distinguished from simile, in which a word of likeness is always expressed. Thus, the sentence "Roderick Dhu fought like a lion" contains a simile. "He was a lion in the fight" contains a metaphor. See TROPE. [< L. metaphora. < Gr. metaphora, < meta, over, + pherō, bear.]

Synonyms: see ALLEGORY; FIGURE.

—mixed metaphor. 1. Figurative language in which two or more incongruous metaphors are used, as in the quotation:

I bridle in my struggling Muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.
ADDISON Letter from Italy l. 161.

2. The confusion of figurative with plain statement, as in "Boyle was the father of chemistry, and brother to the Earl of Cork!"

—met'a-phor-ist, n. One given to metaphors.

met"a-phor'ic-al, met'a-fer'ic-al, a. Relating to or characterized by metaphor; abounding in figures of speech; figurative; tropical.

The metaphorical expression, a well-balanced mind, has really a profound scientific meaning.
DRAPER Thoughts on Future Civil Policy ch. 1, p. 45. [H. '75.]

met"a-phos'phate, met'a-fes'fēt, n. Chem. A salt of metaphosphoric acid.

met"a-phos-phor'ic, met'a-fes-fer'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from phosphoric acid.

—metaphosphoric acid, a colorless, amorphous, deliquescent compound (HPO_3) that is formed when phosphoric acid is heated until the residue does not give off any more moisture. Called also glacial phosphoric acid.

met'a-phrase, n. 1. A literal translation; a rendering word for word from one language into another: opposed to paraphrase. 2. A phrase in response; retort. 3. A school exercise consisting in the rendering of a piece of poetry into prose, or of prose into verse, in the same language. [< Gr. metaphrasis, < meta, over, + phrazō, speak.] met-aph'ra-sis‡.

met'a-phrast, met'a-frast, n. 1. One who translates closely or word for word. 2†. One who renders poetry into prose or prose into poetry. [< Gr. metaphrastēs, < meta, over, + phrazō, speak.]

met"a-phras'tic, met'a-fras'tic, a. 1. Rendering or rendered literally. met"a-phras'tic-al‡. 2. Philol. Expressing by particles rather than by inflection.

The formation of such phrases as . . . the English, 'I shall do,' 'thou will do,' may be called analytical or metaphrastic.
MAX MÜLLER Science of Language vol. i, ch. 13, p. 256. [S. '91.]

met"a-phys'ic, met'a-fiz'ic, a. Metaphysical.

met"a-phys'ic, n. 1. The branch of philosophy that deals with the conceptions or principles at the basis of all phenomena, including being, reality, substance, time, space, motion, becoming, change, identity, difference, cause, etc.; metaphysical philosophy; the science of real as distinguished from phenomenal being; the philosophy of the ultimate nature, causes, or reasons of things; ontology; as, LOTZE'S "Metaphysics."

Metaphysics was formerly distinguished into general and special. The former was called Ontology, or the science of being in general, whether infinite or finite, spiritual or material, and explained therefore the most universal notions and attributes common to all beings — such as entity, nonentity, essence, existence, unity, identity, diversity, &c. This is metaphysics properly so called. Special metaphysics was sometimes called Pneumatology, and included 1. Natural Theology, or Theodicy; 2. Rational Cosmology, or the science of the origin and order of the world, and 3. Rational Psychology, which treated of the nature, faculties, and destiny of the human mind.
K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 313. [SH. & CO. '78.]

met"a-phys'ic-al, met'a-fiz'ic-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to metaphysics; of the nature of or in accordance with the principles of metaphysics; philosophical. 2. Treating of or versed in metaphysics. 3. Beyond or above the physical or phenomenal; of the nature of abstract being; transcendental.

I have often said that I do not know what to do with a metaphysical God, and that I will have none but the God of the Bible, who is heart to heart with us. NIEBUHR in Rawlinson's Hist. Evidences lect. i, p. 235, note xiii. [G. & L. '60.]

4†. Supernatural or preternatural. met"a-phys'ic‡ [Archaic]. —metaphysical method, a method based on the assumption that nothing is possible which we can not conceive to be possible.

met"a-phys'ic-al-ly, met'a-fiz'ic-al-i, adv. 1. According to the methods or principles of metaphysics; in a metaphysical manner. 2†. Supernaturally or preternaturally.

met"a-phy-si'cian, met'a-fi-zish'an, n. 1. One skilled in metaphysics.

JOUBERT Thoughts tr. by Calvert, ch. 16, p. 158. [W. v. S. '67.]

2. [Recent & Colloq.] One who practises the mind-cure. [C.] met"a-phys'i-cist‡.

met"a-phys"i-co-the"o-log'ic-al, met'a-fiz'i-co-thi'o-loj'ic-al, a. Partaking of both metaphysics and theology.

met"a-phys'ics, met'a-fiz'ics, n. 1. Same as METAPHYSIC, 1.

To explain the why of things we must discover their reason and their ends. And this is the office of metaphysics.
W. S. LILLY On Shibboleths ch. 1, p. 17. [C. & H. '92.]

2. Philosophy in the wide sense: same as PHILOSOPHY, 3.

I am inclined to define Metaphysics as the Science which inquires into the original or intuitive convictions of the mind, with the view of generalising and expressing them, and also of determining what are the objects revealed by them.
MCCOSH Intuitions pt. III, bk. i, ch. 11, p. 281. [C. & BROS. '72.]

3. Specifically, the principles of philosophy as applied to explain the methods of any particular science; as, the metaphysics of geometry; the metaphysics of theology.

Every science has its metaphysic. LEWES Problems of Life and Mind first series, vol. i, intro., pt. i, ch. 4, p. 62. [O. & CO. '74.]

4. Mental science in general; psychology: especially in the Scottish school.

Now the Philosophy of Mind,—Psychology or Metaphysics, in the widest signification of the terms,—is threefold; for the object it immediately proposes for consideration may be either, (1) Phænomena in general; or, (2) Laws; or, (3) Inferences,—Results.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. vii. p. 85. [G. & L. '59.]

It is a problem of metaphysics to define the province of Fancy and Imagination. EMERSON Letters and Social Aims, Imagination p. 32. [H. M. & CO. '89.]

5. In the Kantian school, the science of God, freedom, and immortality. 6. Indefinitely, abstruse, confused, and bewildering discussions: a popular use suggested by the character of many works in philosophy.

There is nothing to compare with the zeal with which young men of a certain age and intellectual training will talk metaphysics. J. HAWTHORNE Professor's Sister ch. 1, p. 15. [B. C. & CO.]

7. [Archaic.] The science of supernatural or magical means and agencies. [< F. métaphysique, < LL. metaphysica, neut. pl., < Gr. tōn meta ta physika, description of those of Aristotle's works which came after physics; meta, after; physica, PHYSICS.] met"a-phys'ic‡.

met"a-phys"i-o-log'ic-al, met'a-fiz'i-o-loj'ic-al, a. Beyond the scope of physiology.

met-aph'y-sis, met-af'i-sis, n. Change of nature or constitution; metamorphosis. [< META- + Gr. physis, nature.]

met"a-pla'si-a, met'a-plē'si-a or -plą'si-a, n. The process in which a tissue changes from one form to another, as cartilage into bone. [< Gr. metaplassis; see METAPLASIS.]

met-ap'la-sis, met-ap'la-sis, n. In ontogeny, the stage of completed development. [< Gr. metaplasis, < meta, over, + plasis, forming, < plassō, form.]

met'a-plasm[1], met'a-plazm, n. Gram. 1. Change in the form of a word by addition, retrenchment, or transposition of a letter or syllable; also, the form resulting from such change. See APOCOPE; METATHESIS; PROSTHESIS.

According to Buttmann, . . . the form . . . is nothing more than a metaplasm, . . . a change very conceivable in those times, when forms were not much regulated by analogy.
ANTHON Homer's Iliad bk. iii, p. 248, note. [H. '55.]

2. Declension in which the oblique cases are not regularly derived from the nominative. Compare HETEROCLITE; HETEROGENEOUS. [< L. metaplasmus, < Gr. metaplasmos, transformation, < meta, over, + plassō, form.]

met'a-plasm[2], n. A stable form of protoplasm found in the walls and granular contents of cells. See illus. under CELL. [< META- + PLASM.]

met'a-plast, met'a-plast, n. Gram. A word or a stem showing metaplasm.

met"a-plas'tic, met'a-plas'tic, a. 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or produced by metaplasia; as, metaplastic ossification. 2. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by metaplasm.

met'a-pleur, met'a-plūr, n. A part of the epipleur of Amphioxus. [< META- + Gr. pleura, side.]

—met"a-pleu'ral, a. Of or pertaining to a metapleuron or metapleur.

met"a-plex'us, met'a-plex'us, n. The choroid plexus of the fourth ventricle of the brain.

met"ap-neus'tic, met'ap-nūs'tic, a. Entom. Having only the hind pair of stigmata open, as the tracheal system in many aquatic or parasitic larval Diptera. [< META- + Gr. pneustikos, of breathing, < pneō, breathe.] met"a-po'di-al, met'a-pō'di-al, I. a. Of or pertaining to the metapodialia or a metapodium. II. n. A metapodial bone.

met″a-po″di-a′le, met″ą-pō″di-ē′lē or -ą′lē, n. [-LI-A, pl.] A bone of the metacarpus or of the metatarsus. [< META- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.]

met″a-po′di-um, met″ą-pō′di-um, n. [-DI-A, pl.] Conch. The posterior part of the foot, as in gastropods and pteropods. [< META- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.] met′a-pode‡.

met″a-pol′i-tics, met″ą-pel′i-tics, n. Politics treated from a merely speculative or philosophical point of view. met″a-pol′i-tic‡.

met″a-poph′y-sis, met″ą-pef′i-sis, n. [-SES, pl.] One of the processes on the dorsal and lumbar vertebræ near the articular processes: reduced in man to small tubercles; a mammillary process. [< MET- + APOPHYSIS.] — met″ap″o-phys′i-al, a.

met″a-post″scu-tel′lum, met″ą-pōst″skiu-tel′um, n. Entom. The postscutellum of the metanotum. — met″a-post-scu′tel-lar, a.

met″a-præ-scu′tum, met″ą-prī-skiū′tum or -prē-scū′tum, n. Entom. The præscutum of the metanotum. — met″a-præ-scu′tal, a.

met″a-psy′che, met″ą-saī′kī, n. The metencephalon. [< META- + Gr. psychē, soul.]

met-ap″sy-cho′sis, met-ap″si-cō′sis, n. The action of one mind or spirit upon another without interposition of any known physical agent. See TELEPATHY. [< Gr. metapsychosis. < meta, over, + psychōsis; see PSYCHOSIS.]

met-ap″te-ryg′i-um, met-ap″tę-rij′i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Ich. The posterior one of the basal elements of a pectoral fin, as in sharks. — met-ap″te-ryg′i-al, a.

met″ap-ter′y-goid, met″ap-ter′i-goid. I. a. Being behind the pterygoid. II. n. A metapterygoid bone.

met″ap-to′sis, met″ap-tō′sis, n. 1. Med. (1) Change in the seat of a disease. (2) Transformation in the nature of a disease. 2. Logic. Change in the force of a proposition from truth to falsehood, or vice versa. [< Gr. metaptōsis, < meta, over, + piptō, fall.]

met″ar-rhe′a, met″ą-rī′ą, n. Med. 1. Transfer of the seat of a disease from without to within; a striking in of disease. 2. Change of a disease from part to part; metastasis. [< Gr. metarrhoia, change of stream, < meta, over, + rheō, flow.]

Met″ar-rhip′tæ, met″ą-rip′tī or -tē, n. pl. Conch. An order of bivalves with a subcentral adductor and the foot turned round in front of the umbo, as in tridacnids. [< Gr. metarrhiptō, turn upside down, < meta, over, + rhiptō, throw.] — met″ar-rhip′tous, a.

met″a-scu-tel′lum, met″ą-skiu-tel′um, n. Entom. The scutellum of the metanotum. — met″a-scu′tel-lar, a.

met″a-scu′tum, met″ą-skiū′tum, n. Entom. The scutum of the metanotum.— met″a-scu′tal, a.

met″a-sil′i-cate, met″ą-sil′i-kēt, n. Chem. A salt of metasilicic acid: specially applied to certain minerals more frequently called bisilicates.

met″a-si-lic′ic, met″ą-si-lis′ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from silica. — metasilicic acid, a gelatinous compound (H_2SiO_3) formed when a solution of sodium silicate is treated with an acid.

met″a-so-mat′ic, met″ą-so-mat′ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to metasomatosis. 2. Of or pertaining to a metasome.

met″a-so′ma-tist, met″ą-sō′ma-tist, n. Geol. One who holds the theory of metasomatosis.

met″a-so′ma-tome, met″ą-sō′ma-tōm, n. One of the interspaces of primitive vertebræ. [< META- + Gr. sōma, body, + temnō, divide.]

met″a-so″ma-to′sis, met″ą-sō″ma-tō′sis, n. Geol. That form of metamorphism which consists in chemical changes, under heat and pressure, by which a rock of one kind changes into another kind, or new mineral species are formed from its constituents. [< META- + Gr. sōma(t-), body.] met″a-so′ma-tism‡.

met′a-some, met′ą-sōm, n. Conch. The posterior part of the body, as in cephalopods. [< META- + Gr. sōma, body.] met″a-so′ma‡.

met-as′ses, met-as′ez, n. pl. Leggings. See quotation.

> He was lounging about, in an old hunting frock and metasses or leggins, of deer skin. IRVING Crayon Miscellany, Tour of the Prairies ch. 3, p. 28. [G. P. P. '61.]

met″a-stan′nate, met″ą-stan′êt, n. Chem. A salt of metastannic acid.

met″a-stan′nic, met″ą-stan′ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from stannic acid.— metastannic acid, a white insoluble crystalline compound ($H_{16}Sn_5O_{15}$) formed when tin is oxidized by nitric acid.

met-as′ta-sis, met-as′tą-sis, n. 1. Change of one thing into another. Specifically: (1) Biol. Metabolism. (2) Theol. Baptismal regeneration. 2. Med. The shifting or translation of a disease or of its manifestations from one part or from one organ to another, as sometimes in rheumatic gout. [< Gr. metastasis, < meta, over, + histēmi, place.]

met″a-stat′ic, met″ą-stat′ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or caused or characterized by metastasis; as, a metastatic abscess or change.— met″a-stat′ic-al-ly, adv.

met″a-ster′num, met″ą-stėr′num, n. 1. Anat. The posterior element of the breast-bone, represented in man by the ensiform process. 2. Entom. The ventral sclerite of the metathorax. [< META- + STERNUM.] — met″a-ster′nal, a.

met″a-sthen′ic, met″ą-sthen′ic, a. Having the strength in the posterior parts, as a kangaroo. [< META- + Gr. sthenos, strength.]

Met″a-stig′ma-ta, met″ą-stig′ma-tą, n. pl. Entom. A division of acaridans or mites with spiracles in the posterior part of the body. [< META- + Gr. stigma, mark.] met″a-stig′mate, a. & n.

met′a-stome, met′ą-stōm, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] A membranous appendage behind and over the mandibles, as in crustaceans; posterior lip. [< META- + Gr. stoma, mouth.] met-as′to-ma‡.

met″a-tar′sal, met″ą-tār′sal. I. a. Of or pertaining to the metatarsus. II. n. One of the bones of the metatarsus. — met″a-tar-sal′gi-a, n. Pathol. Pain in the middle of the foot.

met″a-tar-sa′le, met″ą-tār-sē′lī or -sg′lê, n. [-LI-A, pl.] A metatarsal. — met″a-tar″so-dig′it-al, a. Of or pertaining to the metatarsus and the digits.— met″a-tar″so-pha-lan′ge-al, a. Of or pertaining to the metatarsus and the phalanges.

met″a-tar′sus, met″ą-tār′sus, n. 1. The part of the hind or pelvic limb that is between the tarsus or ankle and the phalanges or bones of the toe. In man it consists of five bones. See illus. under TARSUS. 2. Entom. (1) The proximal sclerite of the tarsus. (2) The entire hind tarsus. [< META- + TARSUS.] met′a-tarse‡.

met″a-tar-tar′ic, met″ą-tār-tar′ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from tartaric acid.— metatartaric acid, an amorphous deliquescent compound ($C_4H_6O_6$), isomeric with tartaric acid, and derived from it by keeping it for some time at its melting temperature.

met″a-tat′ic, met″ą-tat′ic, a. Of or pertaining to coincidence in direction of stress and strain; as, a metatatic plane. [< META- + Gr. tatos, stretched, < teinō, stretch.] — met″a-tat′ic-al-ly, adv.

me-ta′te, mę-tä′tē, n. [Sp. Am.] A flat, oblong stone, variously arranged, on which maize, cacao, etc., are reduced to meal by rubbing under a smaller stone. me-ta′te-stone″‡.

Mexican Woman Using a Metate.

a, ornamental metate from Costa Rica.

met″a-te′la, met″ą-tē′lą or -tē′lą, n. [-LÆ, -lī or -lê, pl.] A fold of pia mater over the roof of the fourth ventricle of the brain; the posterior medullary velum. [< META- + TELA.]

Met″a-the′ri-a, met″ą-thī′ri-ą or -thē′ri-ą, n. pl. Mam. The Didelphia; marsupials. [< META- + Gr. thērion, wild beast, dim. of thēr, wild beast.] — met″a-the′ri-an, a. & n.

met-ath′e-sis, met-ath′ę-sis, n. 1. Gram. The transposition of letters or sounds for euphony or ease of pronunciation, as lisp (lips), wasp (wæps), third (thridda). Compare EPITHESIS; EPENTHESIS. 2. Logic. Same as CONVERSION. 3. Chem. Same as METALEPSY. 4. Surg. The operation of removing a morbific substance from one place to another for relief, as by pushing a calculus lodged in the urethra back into the bladder. [< Gr. metathesis, < meta, over; and see THESIS.] — met″a-thet′ic, met″a-thet′ic-al, a.

met″a-tho″ra-co-the′ca, met″ą-thō″rą-co-thī′cą or -thē′cą, n. Entom. The part of the pupal skin that covers the metathorax. [< METATHORAX + Gr. thēkē; see THECA.]

met″a-tho′rax, met″ą-thō′rax, n. Entom. The hindmost of the three segments of the thorax, bearing the hind wings and the third pair of legs. See COLEOPTERA. — met″a-tho-rac′ic, a.

met″a-ti-tan′ic, met″ą-ti-tan′ic, a. Chem. Of or obtained from titanium.— metatitanic acid, a soft white compound (H_2TiO_3) that is precipitated when acid solutions of titanium dioxid are boiled.

met′a-tro″phy, met′ą-trō″fi or met-at′ro-fi, n. Pathol. A wasting away because of inflammation or disordered nutrition. [< MET- + ATROPHY.] met″a-tro′phi-a‡.

met″a-tung′state, met″ą-tung′stêt, n. Chem. A salt of metatungstic acid.

met″a-tung′stic, met″ą-tung′stic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from tungsten.

— metatungstic acid, a yellow crystalline compound ($H_6W_4O_{13}$) obtained by decomposing barium metatungstate with dilute sulfuric acid.

met″a-van′a-date, met″ą-van′ą-dêt, n. Chem. A salt of metavanadic acid.

met″a-va-nad′ic, met″ą-vą-nad′ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from vanadium.

— metavanadic acid, a yellow crystalline compound (HVO_3) formed by heating copper vanadate with sulfurous acid: used as a substitute for gold bronze.

met-ax′in, met-ax′in, n. An elementary substance forming a part of the composition of the structure of a granule of chlorophyl. [< Gr. metaxy, between, < meta, among.]

met″a-xy′lene, met″ą-zai′lin, n. A colorless, volatile, inflammable isomeric modification of xylene (C_8H_{10}) contained in the less volatile portion of light coal-naphtha.

me″ta″yage′, mė″tė″yūzh′ or mę-tė′yęj, n. That system of cultivating land in which the produce is shared between owner and tenant; called in the United States working on shares. [< F. métayage, < métayer; see METAYER.]

me″ta″yer′, mė″tė″yė′ or mę-tė′yęr, n. In France and Italy, a farmer who cultivates another's land on the metayage plan. [< F. métayer, < LL. medietarius, < L. medietas, middle part, half, < medius, middle.]

Met″a-zo′a, met″ą-zō′ą, n. pl. Zool. A primary division of the animal kingdom, whose germs become differentiated into at least an outer wall or ectoderm and an inner wall or endoderm, including all animals higher than protozoans. [< META- + Gr. zōon, animal.]

— met″a-zo′an, a. & n.— met″a-zo′ic, a.— met″a-zo′on, n.

mete[1], mīt, v. I. t. [ME′TED, MET†; ME′TING.] 1. To allot or distribute by measure; measure (out); apportion.

> The Africans have had hard measures meted out to them in the world's history. LIVINGSTONE Last Journals ch. 14, p. 296. [H. '75.]

2. [Archaic.] To measure. 3. To serve as a standard of measurement.

II. i. 1. [Archaic.] To measure. 2†. To take measured aim. [< AS. metan, measure.]

mete[2†], v. I. i. To dream. II. i. To become insane.

mete[3†], vt. & vi. To meet.

mete[4], n. [Archaic.] 1. A boundary-line or -mark; limit; confine: usually in the phrase metes and bounds.

> A rural scene, almost perfectly level, so that each man's metes and bounds can be traced out as on a map. HAWTHORNE Tales and Sketches, Browne's Folly p. 210. [O. & CO. '76.]

2. Measure.

> We get back our mete as we measure. ALICE CARY Nobility st. 2.

mete[2†], n. Meat.— mete′-borde″†, n. A dining-table.

mete′corn″†, n. A measure of corn formerly given by a lord to his tenants for faithful service.

mete′gav-el†, n. A tax or rent paid in food.

me′tel†, n. A dream. mee′tel-est†; me′tel-est.

met-em′bry-o, met-em′bri-ō, n. A metazoan gastrula. [< MET- + EMBRYO.]— met-em′bry-on′ic, a.

met″em-pir′ic, met″em-pir′ic, n. A believer in metempiricism. met″em-pir′i-cist‡.

met″em-pir′ic-al, met″em-pir′ic-ąl, a. Lying beyond the bounds of experience, as intuitive principles; not derived from experience; transcendental; a priori: opposed to empirical. met″em-pir′ic‡.

> The term Metempirical . . . is the exact correlative of Empirical, and designates whatever lies beyond the limits of possible Experience. LEWES Problems of Life and Mind first series, vol. i, intro., pt. i, ch. 2, p. 16. [O. & CO. '74.]

met″em-pir′i-cism, met″em-pir′i-sizm, n. The science of pure reason; metaphysics proper; hence, with some, transcendental philosophy.

met″em-pir′ics, met″em-pir′ics, n. The concepts and doctrines of metaphysics.

met-emp′sy-chose, met-emp′si-cōz, vt. [-CHOSED; -CHO′SING.] To remove or translate (a soul) into another body. met-emp″sy-cho′size‡.

met-emp″sy-cho′sis, met-emp′si-cō′sis, n. Transition of the soul of a human being at death into another body, whether of man or beast; transmigration of souls from body to body.

> The Hindoos . . . originated and elaborated the doctrine of metempsychosis, or the transmigration of souls, a sort of erratic and morally judicial evolution. C. W. HUTSON Beginnings of Civilization ch. 10, p. 111. [C. P. CO. '91.]

met″emp-to′sis, met″emp-tō′sis, n. Chronol. A suppression of the bissextile day in the lunar calendar once in 134 years, to prevent the new moon from being located a day too late: the opposite of proemptosis. [< MET- + Gr. emptōsis, falling upon or in, < en, in, + piptō, fall.]

met″en-ceph′a-lon, met″en-sef′ą-lon, n. [-LA, pl.] 1. The fifth cerebral vesicle of the brain and the parts derived therefrom, comprising the medulla oblongata and the posterior part of the roof of the fourth ventricle. See illus. under CEREBRAL VESICLE. 2. The part of the brain consisting of the cerebellum and pons Varolii. [< MET- + ENCEPHALON.]— met″en-ceph-al′ic, a.

met″en-so″ma-to′sis, met″en-sō″ma-tō′sis, n. The incorporation of one body into another by its dissolution and the recomposition of its elements. [LL., < Gr. metensōmatōsis, < meta, over, + en, in, + sōma(t-), body.]

met-en′te-ron, met-en′tę-ron, n. [-RA, pl.] An enteron in any modification from its primitive state. — met-en″te-ron′ic, a.

me′te-o-gram, mī′tę-o-gram, n. The automatic record-sheet from a meteorograph. [< Gr. meteōron (see METEOR) + gramma, writing, < graphō, write.]

me′te-o-graph, n. Same as METEOROGRAPH.

me′te-or, mī′tę-ęr, n. 1. A sudden luminous phenomenon, as of a star or bright body in rapid motion through the air, produced by a small mass of matter from the celestial spaces striking the air with planetary velocity, and suffering heating, dissipation, or combustion: when not very brilliant called a shooting star.

> When numerous meteors are seen in one night, they generally appear to originate in some one point of the sky, called their radiant point. This point is the same for the same period of the year, and meteors are commonly named from the constellation in which they are situated. The chief systems thus named are the Lyraids (April 19, 20), the Pegasids (Aug. 10), the Perseids (Aug. 9–11), the Andromeds (Nov. 27), the Orionids (Oct.–Nov.), the Taurids (Nov. 1–15), and the Leonids (Nov. 13, 14). See METEOROID.
> It has been calculated that the average number of meteors which traverse the atmosphere daily, and which are large enough to be visible to the naked eye on a dark clear night, is no less than 7,500,000. J. N. LOCKYER Elements of Astron. ch. 11, art. cccvii, p. 164. [A. '89.]

2. Same as METEOROID. 3. Any phenomenon of the atmosphere: now only a technical use. Such phenomena include aerial meteors (winds), aqueous meteors (rain, snow, etc.), luminous meteors (the aurora, rainbow, etc.), and igneous meteors (lightning, shooting stars, etc.). [< OF. meteore, < Gr. meteōron, neut. s. of meteōros, in air, < meta, beyond, + aeirō, raise.]

— me′te-or-cloud″, n. The luminous track or trail of a meteor; a meteor-track; sometimes, improperly, a meteor-system.— m.-dust, n. Interstellar dust or fragments of meteoric matter in free space.— m.-system, n. A swarm of meteoroids pursuing the same orbit.

me″te-or′ic, mī″tę-ėr′ic, a. 1. Relating to or having the nature of meteors; composed of meteors. 2. Of or pertaining to the atmosphere or its phenomena; atmospherical; meteorological. 3. Transitorily brilliant, like a meteor; dazzlingly bright for a moment and then fading away; as a meteoric career.

> Precocious intellects in all ages of the world have flashed with meteoric splendor.
> DEPEW Orations and Speeches, Nov. 22, '80 p. 220. [CAS. CO.]

[< LL. meteoricus, in air, elevated, < Gr. meteōros; see METEOR.] me″te-or′ic-al‡.

— meteoric astronomy, the branch of astronomy that treats of the relations of meteoric bodies to the other heavenly bodies.— m. iron, see METEORITE.— m. paper, a paper-like vegetable substance that floats in the air: formerly supposed to be of meteoric origin.— m. ring, a flight of meteors so thickly distributed around the sun or other central body as to form a ring.— m. showers, periodic appearances of meteors in great numbers. See METEOR; METEOROID.— m. stone, a meteorite, especially one of a stony composition or appearance. — m. waters, condensed atmospheric vapors.

me′te-or-ism, mī′tę-ęr-izm, n. The distention of the abdomen by tympanitis. [< Gr. meteōrismos, a being raised up, < meteōros; see METEOR.]

me′te-or-ite, mī′tę-ęr-ait, n. 1. A fallen meteor; a mass of stone or iron that has fallen upon the earth from space. Several varieties of meteorites are known: (1) metallic nickeliferous iron (aerosiderite, holosiderite, siderolite, as transferred), exhibiting, when polished and etched, the peculiar crystalline markings called Widmannstättian figures; (2) a spongy mass of iron containing olivite and other minerals in its vesicles (pallasite, mesosiderite, siderolite); (3) a stony mass with disseminated particles of iron (chondrite, sporadosiderite); (4) a stony mass without iron (asiderite).

From prehistoric times down to 1893 we have a record of about 520 meteorites, of which number 142 fell within the territory of the United States, 36 of which were seen to fall. OLIVER W. HUNTINGTON in Letter to Standard Dict. May 16, '93.

2. Same as METEOROID.

A great astronomical discovery of modern times is, that meteorites, the so-called falling stars, . . . follow a perfectly definite track in space, and that this track is in each case the path of a known comet. TAIT Recent Advances lect. x, p. 254. [MACM. '76.]

me″te-or′o-lite‡ (XIII).

me″te-o-rit′ic, mĭ″tē-o-rit′ĭc, a. Of or pertaining to meteorites. — meteoritic hypothesis or theory, the theory that nebulæ and comets are masses of meteorites constantly colliding with each other: announced by J. Norman Lockyer.

me′te-or-ize‡, vi. To vaporize.

meteoro-, Derived from Greek meteōron, meteor (see METEOR): a combining form.— me″te-or′o-gram, n. Same as METEOGRAM.— me″te-or′o-graph, W. (me′te-or-o-graph, C.), n. An instrument by which several meteorological elements are recorded in combination. me′te-o-graph′ic.— me″te-or″o-graph′ic, a. Pertaining to meteorography.— me″te-or-og′ra-phy, n. The recording or writing of combined atmospheric phenomena, as by registration in a meteorograph; descriptive meteorology. — me′te-or-o-man″cy, n. Divination by atmospheric phenomena, especially thunder and lightning.— me″te-or-om′e-ter, n. A meteorograph transmitting its record to some distant central station, usually by electricity.— me″te-or′o-scope (XIII), n. 1. An instrument for measuring the apparent path of a meteor. 2†. An astronomical instrument formerly used to determine angular distances. — me″te-or′o-sco″py, n.

me′te-or-oid, mĭ′tē-or-oid, n. One of innumerable small particles of matter moving through the celestial spaces, which, when they encounter the atmosphere, form meteors or shooting stars.

Many meteoroids describe elliptic orbits about the sun. Some move in great elongated swarms, through which the earth passes periodically, producing meteoric showers. In many cases the orbits of these swarms coincide with those of comets. See METEOR. [< METEOR + -OID.]

— me″te-or-oid′al, a.

me″te-or″o-log′ic-al, mĭ″tē-or″o-lej′ĭc-al, a. Of or pertaining to meteorology or atmospheric phenomena.

It is necessary, in meteorological observations, to know the highest temperature of the day and the lowest temperature of the night. GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, ¶ 310, p. 285. [W. W. '90.]

me″te-or″o-log′ic‡.

— meteorological curves, lines used in meteorological plottings, as isobars and isotherms.— m. elements, atmospheric conditions such as pressure, temperature, humidity, wind-direction, velocity, sunshine, precipitation, clouds, etc. — m. station, a station at which observations of atmospheric conditions are regularly made.— m. tables, compilations of meteorological data.

— me″te-or″o-log′ic-al-ly, adv.

me″te-or-ol′o-gist, mĭ″tē-or-ol′o-jist, n. An investigator of atmospheric phenomena; a specialist in meteorology.

me″te-or-ol′o-gy, mĭ″tē-or-ol′o-ji, n. 1. The department of natural philosophy that treats of the phenomena of the atmosphere, especially those that relate to weather and climate, their relations to each other, and the laws to which they are subject.

The term meteorology originally included astronomical phenomena, but by common consent it now relates only to weather and climate. A. W. GREELY Am. Weather p. 2. [D. M. & CO.]

2. The character of the weather and of atmospheric changes of any particular place.

In ancient times, when irrigation was carried to a far greater extent than it is at present, the meteorology . . . may . . . have been different. RAWLINSON Herod. vol. i, bk. i, p. 257. [A. '85.]

me″te-or-ous, mĭ″tē-or-us, C. (mĭ-tĭ-o′rus or mĭ″tē-o′rus, W.), a. Of the nature of a meteor; meteoric.

met″ep-en-ceph′a-lon, met″ep-en-sef′a-lon, n. The parts of the brain derived from the fourth and fifth cerebral vesicles. [< MET- + EPENCEPHALON.]

— met″ep-en-ceph-al′ic, a.

met-ep′i-cœle, met-ep′i-sil, n. The fourth ventricle of the brain. [< MET- + EPICŒLE.]

met-ep′i-me′ron, met-ep′i-mī′ron, n. Entom. The epimeron of the metapleuron.— met-ep″i-me′ral, a.

met-ep″i-ster′num, met-ep′i-stėr′num, n. Entom. The episternum of the metapleuron.

— met-ep″i-ster′nal, a.

me′ter, ‖ mĭ′tėr, vt. To measure or test by means of a me′tre, ‖ meter.

me′ter[1], ‖ n. 1. Pros. Definite measurement by feet me′tre, ‖ and lines of a given length; also, a specific rhythmic arrangement of words.

A series of feet is called a colon; a long verse consisting of two such groups combined is dicolic. Meters are distinguished as monometer, dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter, hexameter, etc., according to the number of bases in a verse. In Greek or Latin trochaic, iambic, and anapæstic verse, a base consists of two feet; an iambic trimeter = 6 feet. In other kinds of verse each foot is a base; thus, any dactylic or an English iambic or trochaic hexameter = 6 feet. See FOOT: MEASURE; RHYTHM; VERSE.

2. Hymnology. The character of a stanza as being composed of a given number of lines each of which is composed of feet of a given number, construction, and accent; a pattern or plan of versification.

Iambic meters are (1) common meter, in which the stanza is composed of four lines alternately of four and of three iambic feet; (2) long m., in which the stanza contains four lines of four feet each; and (3) short m., in which the first two lines have three feet, the third four, and the fourth three. When the stanza is doubled the meter is called common m. double, long m. double, etc. Sometimes long meter has six lines to the stanza, and is then known as long m. six lines, or long particular m. Common particular m. contains two lines of four iambics each, then one line of three iambics, then two more lines of four iambics, and then one more of three iambics. Short particular m. has two lines of three iambics followed by one of four, and then two more of three followed by one of four. Hallelujah m. contains four lines of three feet or six syllables, each followed by two lines of four feet or eight syllables. The meter tens has lines each composed of five feet; in sevens and sixes the stanza is composed of either four or eight lines, each of which contains three iambics, the odd-numbered lines ending with an added unaccented syllable.

Trochaic meters are sevens, eights and sevens, sixes, sixes and fives, etc. These names indicate the number of syllables in the lines; lines having an odd number terminate with an added accented syllable.

Dactylic meters, as also anapestic, are elevens, elevens and tens, etc.

3. Mus. (1) The character of a composition as being divisible into measures equal in time and length, and similar in rhythmic construction; musical time. (2) A foot, as a subdivision of a bar or measure. (3) The relation between two feet having the same subdivisions of time-units, but in a different order of succession. (4) The proper grouping of consecutive feet. [< OF. metre. < L. metrum, < Gr. metron, measure.]

Synonyms: euphony, measure, rhythm, verse. Euphony is agreeable linguistic sound, however produced; meter, measure, and rhythm denote agreeable succession of sounds in the utterance of connected words; euphony may apply to a single word or even a single syllable; the other words apply to lines, sentences, paragraphs, etc.; rhythm and meter may be produced by accent only, as in English, or by accent and quantity combined, as in Greek or Italian; rhythm or measure may apply either to prose or to poetry, or to music, dancing, etc.; meter applies only to poetry, and denotes an orderly and measured rhythm with regular divisions into verses, stanzas, strophes, etc. A verse is strictly a metrical line, but the word is often used as synonymous with stanza. Verse, in the general sense, denotes metrical writing without reference to the thought involved; as, prose and verse. Compare POETRY.

me′ter[2], ‖ n. 1. An instrument, apparatus, or machine me′tre, ‖ for measuring fluids, gases, electric currents, grain, etc., and recording the results obtained; as, a gas-meter; a water-meter; an air-meter. Compare -METER, suffix. 2. Any person or thing that measures; specifically, one of several officers formerly appointed by the Corporation of London to exact the customary tolls on certain commodities landed within the city jurisdiction, such as corn, fruit, and salt.

The audience is a constant meter of the orator. EMERSON Society and Solitude, Eloquence p. 59. [H. M. & CO. '80.]

3. A strengthening rope on the edge of a seine or gill-net, either the cork-rope or the lead-line. [< AS. metan, measure, confused with -METER.]

— dry meter, a gas-meter not containing liquid as an essential part. See illus. under GAS-METER.— me′ter-bridge″, n. A form of Wheatstone's balance having a sliding-wire one meter long.— m.-candle, n. The intensity of the light emitted by a standard candle at a distance of one meter.— m.-prover, n. A gas-tank of exactly known dimensions: used to test the accuracy of gas-meters. — m.-wheel, n. The many-chambered drum of a wet gas-meter. It is immersed more than half-way in water, and when gas under pressure is introduced through the axle to a chamber under water, the drum rotates, carrying the chamber upward, and measuring and discharging the gas.— rotary m., a meter with a rotating motion for its piston or follower.— wet m., a gas-meter having a partitioned drum partially submerged in a liquid and caused to rotate by the flow of the gas to be measured.

me′ter[3], ‖ n. The fundamental unit of length in the met- me′tre, ‖ ric system, originally defined as one ten-millionth of the distance on the earth's surface from the pole to the equator, now as the distance between two lines on a certain metallic rod preserved in the archives of the International Metric Commission at Paris. See METRIC SYSTEM.

The Metric System, founded on the metre as the unit of length, has four other leading units, all connected with and dependent upon this. F. A. P. BARNARD Metric System p. 13. [COL. CO. '72.]

-meter, suffix. That by which a thing is measured. [< L. metrum (< Gr. metron) or < Gr. metron, measure.]

me′ter-age, mĭ′tėr-ĕj, n. The act or result of measuring; also, the charge for measurement.

me′ter-er†, n. A metrical writer; rimer.

me′ter-gram″, mĭ′tėr-gram″, n. A unit of work or energy, the work done in raising one gram one meter. [< METER[2] + GRAM[1], n.] mete′wel†, n. Dinner-time. H. Dict.

met-es′the-tism, met-es′thē-tizm, n. The doctrine that consciousness is evolved from the interaction of material qualities: a monistic theory. [< MET- + Gr. aisthētos, va. of aisthanomai, perceive.]

— met″es-thet′ic, a.

mete′stick″, mĭt′stĭc′, n. Naut. A measuring-instrument used in levelling a cargo while it is being stored. It consists of a board sliding at right angles upon a graded standard the end of which rests on the floor or bottom of the hold.

mete′wand″, mĭt′wend″, n. [Archaic.] A measuring-rod.

mete′-yard″†, n. A yardstick.

met′eyn†, n. A mitten.

meth[1], a. Mild; equable; gentle.

meth[2]†, n. Measure; regularity; method.

meth[2]†, n. Wrath; resentment; ire. methe†.

meth[3], n. Mead: a sweet drink.

met-he″mo-glo′bin, etc. Same as METHEMOGLOBIN, etc.

meth′al, meth′al, n. Methylic alcohol. See ALCOHOL. [< meth- in METHYL + -al- in ALCOHOL.]

meth′ane, meth′ān, n. Chem. A stable colorless gas (CH_4) formed by decomposition of vegetable matter: an important constituent of illuminating-gas. Called also methyl hydrid, marsh-gas, formene. [< METHYL.]

Methane is . . . found in coal mines as fire-damp, also in marshes and stagnant pools, from which it may be evolved as gas by stirring the mud. FOWNES Manual of Chem., Methane-Derivatives in vol. ii, p. 46. [J. A. C. '77.]

meth″a-nom′e-ter, meth″a-nom′e-tėr, n. An instrument for automatic detection of fire-damp in coal-mines. [< METHANE + Gr. metron, measure.]

me-theg′lin, me-theg′lin, n. A fermented drink made of water and honey: mead. [< W. meddyglyn, < medd, mead, + llyn, liquor.]

met-he″mo-glo′bin, met-hī″mo-glō′bin, n. A stable crystalline compound formed by oxidation of hemoglobin and contained in blood and urine. met-hæ″mo-glo′bin‡.— met-he″mo-glo″bin-e′mi-a, n. Pathol. The presence in the blood of the red corpuscles in a carbonated condition.— met-he″mo-glo″bin-u′ri-a, n. An affection producing methemoglobin in the urine.

meth′ene, n. Chem. Same as METHYLENE.

meth′e-nyl, meth′ē-nil, n. Chem. A hypothetical hydrocarbon radical (CH) which exists only in combinations. [< METHENE + Gr. hylē, matter.]

meth′er, medh′ėr, n. A large carved wooden cup used formerly in drinking mead. [< METH[3], n., = MEAD[1].]

An Irish Mether. (Dublin Museum.)

meth′id, ‖ meth′id, -id or -did, n.
meth′ide, ‖ Chem. A compound consisting of the radical methyl (CH_3) in combination with an element.

me-thinks′, mē-thinks′, v. impers. [ME-THOUGHT′.] It seems to me: now only in poetry or solemn diction, and often with the force of I think.

Methinks.— In Anglo-Saxon there are two forms; thencan = to think, and thincan = to seem. It is from the latter that the verb in methinks comes. The verb is intransitive; the pronoun dative. R. G. LATHAM Eng. Lang. vol. ii, § 712, p. 383. [L. G. & CO. '73.]

[< AS. mē thynceth; mē, dat. s. of ic, I; thynceth, 3d per. s. pres. ind. act. of thyncan, seem.]

meth″i-on′ic, meth′ī-on′ĭc, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from methyl and sulfur. [< me- in METHYL + Gr. theion, brimstone.] — methionic acid, a white crystalline compound ($CH_4S_2O_6$) formed by the action of fuming sulfuric acid on certain methyl compounds, as methyl cyanid. Called also methene disulfuric acid.

meth′od, meth′ŏd, n. 1. A general or established way or order of doing or proceeding in anything, or the means or manner by which such way is presented or inculcated; as, a method of pronunciation. Specifically: Mus. (1) A system of instruction. (2) A book in which such a system is set forth. (3) Manner or style of execution; technic.

His [Socrates's] method of instruction and influence was conversation, and the street, the shop, the market-place, or the exchange was his school.

STARR KING Substance and Show lect. iii, p. 83. [O. & CO. '77.]

2. Such a natural, regular, or systematic disposition of things or parts as results in homogeneity; suitable and convenient arrangement, as of the details of a business; systematic order; regularity.

The habit of method is essential to all who have much work to do, if they would get through it easily and with economy of time. MATHEWS Getting On in the World ch. 12, p. 166. [S. C. G. '73.]

3. Nat. Hist. The arrangement of natural bodies according to their common characteristics; also, a theoretical basis for systematic observation; as, the Linnean or the Darwinian method. Compare CLASSIFICATION.

Scientific arrangement or method may be defined in general, as the gathering of individual objects into a synthetic whole, by any one of the analyses and generalizations of thought.

PORTER Human Intellect pt. iii, ch. 9, p. 495. [S. '90.]

4. A mode of applying logical principles to the discovery, confirmation, or elucidation of truth. Compare METHODOLOGY; INDUCTIVE METHOD. [< LL. methodus, < Gr. methodos, < meta, after, + hodos, way.]

Synonyms: see DISPOSAL; MANNER; SYSTEM.

— dry method, wet m., see the adjectives.

meth-od′ic-al, meth-ed′ĭc-al, a. 1. Displaying method; given to or characterized by orderly arrangement; having system; regular; orderly; as, a methodical worker. 2. Arranged with method; disposed systematically; as, a methodical report. 3†. Characteristic of the old school of physicians known as methodists. [< LL. methodicus, < Gr. methodikos, < methodos; see METHOD.] meth-od′ic†.— meth-od′ic-al-ly, adv.— meth-od′ic-al-ness, n.

meth-od′ics, meth-ed′ĭcs, n. Same as METHODOLOGY.

meth′od-ism, meth′ŏd-izm, C. E. I. (-o-dizm, W.), n. 1. The state of being methodical or characterized by a method; action according to method or system.

Those very men who undertake to tutor the species in virtue apart from godliness, and apart from the methodism of the gospel, are rendered heartless by disappointment.

CHALMERS Lect. on Romans lect. xxiii, p. 118. [C. & BROS. '74.]

2. [M-] The spirit, doctrines, polity, and worship of the Methodists.

Methodism may be variously regarded, as descriptive of a particular religious tendency, or of a great ecclesiastical body. J. G. ROGERS Church Systems of Eng. lect. xi, p. 547. [H. & S. '81.]

Meth′od-ist, meth′ŏd-ist, n. 1. A member of any branch of the Protestant Christian church that has grown out of the epochal religious movement begun at Oxford University, in the earlier half of the 18th century, and starting in the students' club for religious improvement and study of the Bible, in which John Wesley (1703–'91) as a leader was associated with Charles Wesley, George Whitefield, and others.

Nearly all of the followers of Wesley, who mainly constitute the Methodist churches, adhere to Arminianism in theology; nearly all of Whitefield's, to Calvinism. Methodist church polity ranges all the way from independency through presbytery to moderate episcopacy. The Methodists originally sprang out of the Church of England, as a revolt against the apparent formalism and apathy of the established order, and its neglect of the masses. They have spread over the world and now number many millions. The chief branches of Methodists in Great Britain (extending more or less into its dependencies) are, in the order of their numbers, (1) Wesleyans, (2) Primitive Methodists, (3) United Methodist Free Churches, (4) New Connection Methodists; and in the United States, (1) Methodist Episcopal Church, (2) Methodist Episcopal Church South, (3) African Methodist Episcopal Church, (4) African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, (5) Methodist Protestant Church, (6) Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, (7) Free Methodist Church.

The term Methodist was applied to Mr. Wesley and his associates at Oxford at first in derision; signifying that . . . they were excessively and foolishly methodical in their habits of life.

M. RAYMOND Theology vol. iii, bk. vii, ch. 11, p. 488. [P. & H. '79.]

2. [M-] An observer of method or order in acting and thinking.

Buckle . . . as a methodist . . . is peerless. J. C. RIDPATH in Vincent's You and I, Hist. and Hist. Study p. 562. [F. B. D. '87.]

3. [M-] One of an ancient school of physicians who relied upon general principles or method rather than observation or experiment. Compare DOGMATIST; EMPIRICIST.

meth″o-dis′tic, ‖ meth″o-dis′tic, -al, a. 1. Given meth″o-dis′tic-al, ‖ to methodism or strict devotion to method, especially in religion or morals. 2. [M-] Relating to or characteristic of Methodism or the Methodists.— meth″o-dis′tic-al-ly, adv.

meth′od-ize, ‖ meth′ŏd-aiz, v. [-IZED; -I″ZING.] I. meth′od-ise, ‖ t. To subject to method, or set in proper or convenient order; regulate. II. i. To employ method; act methodically.—meth"od-i-za'[or -sa'tion, n.—meth'od-i"zer, n.

meth"od-ol'o-gy, meth"ŏd-ol'o-ji, n. 1. The science of method or of arranging in due order; especially, the science of proper modes and orders of procedure; as, the methodology of chemistry. 2. Logic. The division of pure logic that treats of the methods of directing the means of thinking to the end of thinking well: including definition, the method of clear thinking; division, of distinct thinking; and proof, of connected thinking.

The fixed method of one period [of philosophy] becomes inadequate to the wants of the next, and thus . . . we acquire a methodology, which can adapt itself to all the possible phases which knowledge may yet assume.
J. D. MORELL Speculative Philos. p. 734, con. [C. & BROS. '72.]

[< Gr. methodos (see METHOD) + -LOGY.]—meth"od-o-log'ic-al, a.—meth"od-ol'o-gist, n. One who teaches or thoroughly understands methodology.

meth"o-gas-tro'sis, meth'o-gas-trō'sis, n. Pathol. Disorder of the stomach from use of alcoholic drink. [< Gr. methy, wine, + gastēr, stomach.]

meth'ol, meth'ōl, n. Chem. Any primary alcohol, especially methyl alcohol. See CARBINOL. [< Gr. methy, wine, + -OL.]

meth"o-ma'ni-a, meth'o-mē'ni-a or -mg'ni-a, n. Pathol. Irresistible craving for intoxicating drink.

We have an increased amount of insanity, methomania, consumption, dyspepsia, and paralysis.
FISKE Unseen World essay xiv, p. 334. [o. & co. '76.]

[< Gr. methy, wine, + MANIA.] met"o-ma'ni-a‡.

me-thought', me-thôt', imp. of METHINKS, v.

meth-ox'yl, meth-ox'il, n. Chem. A hypothetical radical (CH_3O), similar to hydroxyl and consisting of methyl and oxygen. [< meth- in METHYL + -oxyl in HYDROXYL.]

meth'ule, n. Chem. Same as METHYL.

meth'y, meth'i, n. [METH'IES, pl.] A fish, the burbot.

meth'yl, meth'il, n. Chem. An organic radical (CH_3), existing only in combination, as in methyl hydrid ($CH_3.H$), methyl alcohol ($CH_3.HO$), etc. [< MET- + Gr. hylē, wood.] meth'ule‡.—methyl blue, see BLUE.—m. salicylic acid, a crystalline compound ($C_8H_8O_3$), isomeric with methyl-salicylate and obtained from oil of wintergreen.—m. violet, see VIOLET.

Derivatives:—meth'yl-al, n. Chem. A limpid liquid ($C_3H_6O_2$) with an odor of acetic acid, formed by the oxidation of methyl alcohol.—meth"yl-am'in, meth"yl-am'ine, W. (meth'yl-am-in, C.; me-thyl'a-min, L.), n. Chem. A colorless, gaseous, inflammable compound (CH_3NH_2) with a strong ammoniacal odor, contained in the products of the decomposition of certain organic compounds, as bone-oil, crude wood-spirit, and also prepared synthetically.—meth'yl-ate, vt. Chem. To mix or saturate with methyl or methyl alcohol.—methylated spirit, a mixture of ethyl alcohol with 10 per cent. of methyl alcohol, used in the arts. The addition of the methyl alcohol is made so that, according to the excise law in Great Britain, it may be sold duty-free, being unfit for drinking.—meth'yl-ate, n. Chem. A compound derived from methyl alcohol by replacing the hydrogen of the hydroxyl group with an element or radical of equal valence; as, potassium methylate; ethyl methylate.—meth"yl-co'nin, meth"yl-co'nine (meth'yl-co-nin, C.), n. Chem. A narcotic alkaloid ($C_9H_{19}N$) contained in commercial conin, the active principle of hemlock.—meth"yl-cro-ton'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from methyl and crotonic acid.—methylcrotonic acid, same as CEVADIC ACID.

meth'yl-ene, meth'il-ĭn, n. Chem. An organic radical (CH_2) known only in combination. Called also methene.—methylene blue, see BLUE.

meth-yl'ic, meth-il'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing methyl; as, methylic alcohol; methylic ether.

meth-ym'ni-on, meth-im'ni-ŏn, n. Anc. Pros. A short colon following an antistrophe. [< Gr. methymnia, < meta, after, + hymnos, hymn.]

meth'y-sis, meth'i-sis, n. Pathol. Drunkenness. [< Gr. methusis, drunkenness, < methyō, be drunken with wine, < methy, wine.]

meth-ys'ti-cin, meth-is'ti-sin, n. Chem. A white crystalline compound ($C_{18}H_{14}O_6$) extracted from the kawa-root (Piper methysticum) by means of alcohol. [< Gr. methystikos, intoxicating, < methy, wine.]

met'ic, met'ic (XIII), n. Gr. Antiq. A free alien resident in ancient Attica, but not a citizen. [< L. metœcus, < Gr. metoikos, < meta, over, + oikos, house.]

me-tic'u-lous†, a. Over-cautious.—me-tic'u-lous-ly†, adv.

mé'ti-er‡, n. [F.] Trade; profession.

mé"tif', mē'tif' (mī'tif, C.; mā'tif, E.; mē'tēf', W.), n. [F.] [Colloq., Southern U. S.] The offspring of a quadroon and a white person; an octoroon.

me'ting†, n. A dream.

mé"tis', mē'tis', n. [F.] The offspring of métissage; any one of mixed blood, as a mulatto, zambo, or mestizo. me"tisse'‡.

mé'tis-sage, mā'tis-sēj, n. [F.] Intermarriage between races; miscegenation.

met'l, -ld, -l-sum. Mettle, etc. PHIL. Soc.

met'o-che, met'o-kī, n. Arch. An interval between two dentils in a cornice. [< Gr. metochē, sharing, < meta, with, + echō, have.] met"o-don-ti'a-sis, met'o-don-tī'a-sis or -tī'a-sis, n. Med. Faulty or irregular development of the teeth. [< MET- + Gr. odous, tooth.]

met-œ'cious, met-œ'cism. Bot. Same as HETEROŒCIOUS, etc. [< MET- + Gr. oikos, house.]

met"o-le'ic, met'o-lī'ic, A. E. I. Wr. (met-ō'lē-ic, C.), a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from olein.—metoleic acid, an insoluble oily compound, probably a mixture, derived from oleic acid by treatment with sulfuric acid.

Met-on'ic, met-on'ic, a. Relating to or named after Meton, an ancient Athenian astronomer. See CYCLE.

met"o-nym'ic, met'o-nim'ic, a. Relating to or of the nature of metonymy; using one word or name for another. met"o-nym'ic-al‡.—met"o-nym'ic-al-ly, adv.

met-on'y-my, met-on'i-mi (XIII), n. Rhet. A figure of speech that consists in the naming of a thing by one of its attributes or accompaniments; as, "the ermine," for the "bench of judges"; "the bottle," for "drunkenness."

Metonymy is the exchange of names between things related. It is founded not on resemblance but on the relation of, 1. Cause and effect. 2. Progenitor and posterity. 3. Subject and attribute. 4. Place and inhabitant. 5. Container and thing contained. 6. Sign and thing signified. 7. Material and thing made from it.
QUACKENBOS Rhetoric pt. iii, lesson i, p. 248. [A. '82.]

met"o-pan-tri'tis, met'o-pan-trai'tis or -trī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the frontal sinuses.

met"o-pan'trum, met'o-pan'trum, n. [-TRA, pl.] The frontal sinus. [< Gr. metōpon, forehead, + antron, cavity.]

met'o-pe[1], met'o-pī or -pē, n. Arch 1. A square slab, sculptured or plain, between triglyphs in a Doric frieze.

A Sculptured Metope—Centaur Fighting a Greek. (From the entablature of the Parthenon.)

The metopes of the exterior entablature exhibited a succession of ninety-two groups in high relief. STUART AND REVETT Antiquities of Athens, Parthenon p. 53. [T. & B. '41.]

met'o-pe[2], n. The face, forehead, or frontal surface in general; facies. [< Gr. metōpon, forehead, < meta, between, + ōps (ōp-), eye.]—met-op'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the forehead; frontal.—met-o'pi-on, n. [-PI-A, pl.] See CRANIOMETRY.—met'o-pism, n. The condition of having a persistent metopic or frontal suture.—met"o-po-dyn'i-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgia of the forehead and frontal sinuses.—met'o-po-man"cy, n. [Rare.] Divination by inspection of the physiognomy.—met"o-po-scop'ic, met"o-po-scop'ic-al, a. Pertaining to metoposcopy.—met"o-pos'co-pist, n. One versed in metoposcopy.—met"o-pos'co-py, n. The study of physiognomy; the art of judging of character or disposition by inspection of the features.

met-os'te-on, met-os'tē-ŏn, n. [-TE-A, pl.] Ornith. The posterior lateral piece of the breast-bone. [< MET- + Gr. osteon, bone.]

met-ox'e-nous, met-ex'ē-nus, a. Bot. Same as METŒCIOUS or HETEROŒCIOUS.

metr-. Same as METRO-[1]: a combining form meaning 'womb.' The following words are self-explaining by their elements; as, 'metranemia,' anemia of the womb.

metranemia	metrectopia
metratonia (atony)	metrelcosis
metratrophia (atrophy)	metremphraxis
metrectasia	metremphysema

—me"tra-kin-e'sis, n. Feebleness of labor-pains.—me-tral'gi-a, n. Pathol. Pain in the womb.—me"tran-as'tro-phe, n. Pathol. Inversion of the womb.—met-tre'mi-a, n. Pathol. Congestion of the womb. me-træ'mi-a‡; me"tro-hæ'mi-a‡.—me-trem'or-rhoids, n. Uterine varicose veins or hemorrhoids. me-træm'or-rhoids‡.—me"treu-rys'ma, n. Pathol. Morbid dilatation of the womb. me"trau-eurys'mus‡.—me'tri-a, n. Pathol. Puerperal fever.

met'ra, met'rə, n. A pocket-implement combining the uses of many instruments, as thermometer, level, plummet, and lens. [< Gr. metra, pl. of metron, measure.]

met'ran, n. Same as ABUNA.

me'tre, n. Same as METER.

met'ric, met'ric, a. 1. Of or pertaining to measure or meter; relating to measurement. 2. Of or pertaining to the meter as a unit of measurement, or to the metric system. See phrase. met'ric-al‡.

—metric system, a system of weights and measures depending upon the meter, in which the original factors are derived from the meter. The system includes measures of length, of which the meter is the unit; measures of surface, of which the are is the unit; measures of capacity, of which the liter is the unit; and weights, of which the gram is the unit. Ascending in value from each unit the measure is multiplied by ten, and bears a Greek prefix indicating its value, as decameter, which is 10 meters; hectometer, which is 100 meters; kilometer, which is 1,000 meters; and myriameter, which is 10,000 meters. Similarly descending in value the terms bear a Latin prefix indicating their relation to the unit, as decimeter, which is $^1/_{10}$ of a meter; centimeter, which is $^1/_{100}$ of a meter; and millimeter, which is $^1/_{1000}$ of a meter. The following tables show the various units with corresponding factors in other systems. For exact definitions of ARE, GRAM, LITER, and METER, see these words in their proper vocabulary places. Also compare MEASURES and WEIGHTS. The metric system has been legalized by the United States and Great Britain, and is in actual use in every civilized nation except Russia and Montenegro. See illus. on opposite page.

MEASURES OF LENGTH.

Metric Denomination and Value.		Equivalent in Common Use.
myr'i-a-me'ter	10,000 m	6.214 miles
kil'o-me'ter	1,000 m	⅝ 0.62137 mile (3,280 feet, 10 inches)
hec'to-me'ter	100 m	328 feet, 1 inch dec'a-me'ter	10 m	393.7 inches
me'ter	1 m	39.37 inches
dec'i-me'ter	$^1/_{10}$ m	3.937 inches
cen'ti-me'ter	$^1/_{100}$ m	0.3937 inch
mil'li-me'ter	$^1/_{1000}$ m	0.0394 inch

NOTE: In the United States the value of the meter is legalized at 39.37 inches, while in Great Britain and France its exact value is given as 39.37079 inches.

FACTORS FOR CONVERSION: One inch = 0.0254 meter; one foot = 0.3048 meter; one mile = 1,609.35 meters.

ABBREVIATIONS*: cm = centimeter, dm = decimeter, km = kilometer, m = meter, mm = millimeter.

MEASURES OF SURFACE.

hec'tare	10,000 m²	2.471 acres
are	100 m²	119.6 square yards
cen'tare	1 m²	1,550 square inches

FACTORS FOR CONVERSION: One square inch = 0.00452 square meter; one square yard = 0.836 square meter; one acre = 4,047 square meters.

ABBREVIATIONS*: a = are, ha = hectare, m² = square meter.

MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

Metric Denomination and Value.			Equivalent in Common Use.

*Officially adopted abbreviations by International Congress of Metric Weights and Measures.

met'ric-al, met'ric-ul, a. 1. Of or relating to meter; of the nature of verse; composed in poetic measures; rhythmical.

The Building of the Ship is the best example of his [Longfellow's] free-hand metrical style.
E. C. STEDMAN Poets of America ch. 6, p. 207. [H. M. & CO. '85.]

2. Of or pertaining to measure or the meter; metric.

If either system prevail, it will be a triumph of the metrical system, and so far, a triumph of France.
A. L. PERRY Elements of Polit. Econ. ch. 10, p. 245. [S. '71.]

met'ric-al-ly, met'ric-ul-i, adv. In or with regard to meter or poetic measure; rhythmically. me'ter-ly†.

With just allowance for ancient pronunciation, the heroic measure of Chaucer will be found in general not only to be metrically correct, but to possess considerable harmony.
CAMPBELL Essay on Eng. Poetry pt. ii, p. 47. [J. M. '48.]

met-ri'cian, met-rish'ən, n. 1. One versed in metrics. 2. A composer of verse. met'ri-cist‡.

met'rics[1], met'rics, n. The philosophical or mathematical theory of measurement. met'ric‡.

met'rics[2], n. The science or art of meters; the whole doctrine of metrical composition; prosody.

me'trist, mī'trist, n. One versed in meters or skilled in metrical composition; a verse-maker.

Even if you write in a known and approved metre, the odds are, if you are not a metrist yourself, that you will not write harmonious verses.
COLERIDGE Table Talk Apr. 24, '33.

me-tri'tis, mg-trai'tis or -trī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the womb. [< Gr. mētra; see METRO-[1].]

metro-[1], mī-tro-, C., or mē-tro- (met-ro-, W.). Derived from Greek mētra, womb (< mētēr, mother): a combining form distinguished from metro-[2] by pronunciation, as in Greek. The following words are sufficiently self-explaining by their elements; as, 'metrofibroma,' a fibrous tumor in the womb.

metrofibroma	metrophyma
metroleucorrhea	metroplethora
metrolymphangeitis	metropolypus
metromalacosis	metrosalpingitis
metroneurosis	metrosalpinx
metroparalysis	metroscirrhus
metrophlebitis	metrostenosis
metrophlogosis	metrotuberculum

—me"tro-bo-try'tes, n. Pathol. A cauliflower-shaped excrescence at the mouth of the womb.—metroc'a-ce, n. Pathol. Gangrene and sloughing of the womb.—me"tro-camp'sis, n. A flexure of the uterus.—me'tro-cele, n. Pathol. Falling of the womb.—me"tro-ce'lis, n. [-CEL'I-DES, pl.] Pathol. A birthmark; mother's spot.—me"tro-dyn'i-a, n. Same as HYSTERODYNIA.—me"tro-hem'or-rhage, n. Pathol. See METRORRHAGIA.—me"tro-lox'i-a, n. An oblique position of the uterus.—me-tron'cus, n. Pathol. A uterine tumor.—me"tro-path'i-a, n. Pathol. Any disorder of the womb.—me"tro-per"i-to-ni'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of both the womb and the peritoneum; puerperal fever.—me"troph-thi'sis, n. Pathol. Consumption of the womb by ulceration.—me"tro-to'sis, n. Pathol. Falling of the womb; prolapsus uteri. me"tro-pro-to'sis‡.—me"tror-rha'gi-a, n. Pathol. Uterine hemorrhage; flooding.—me"tror-rhe'a, n. Pathol. A morbid discharge from the uterus. me"tror-rhœ'a‡.—me"tror-rheu'ma, n. Pathol. Rheumatism of the womb.—me"tror-rhex'is, n. Pathol. Rupture of the womb.—me″tro-sal-pin″gor-rhex′is, n. Pathol. Rupture of a Fallopian tube.—me′tro-scope, n. Med. An instrument for listening to the sounds of the heart of a fetus in the womb; applied to the neck of the uterus through the vagina.—me-tros′co-py, n. Examination of the uterus.—me″tros-te-re′sis, n. Pathol. The absence or extirpation of the womb.—me″tro-syn″i-ze′sis, n. Pathol. Morbid adhesion of the womb to adjoining parts.—me′tro-tome, n. Surg. Same as HYSTEROTOME.—me″tra-tome′.—me″tro-to′mi-a, n. Surg. The Cæsarean operation.—me-trot′o-my.

metro-[2]. Derived from Greek metron, measure: a combining form.

met′ro-chrome, met′ro-crōm, n. A color-scheme instrument [< METRO-[2] + Gr. chrōma, color.]

met-roc′o-my, met-roc′o-mi, n. Biol. Degree or amount of aggregation among colonial organisms. [< METRO-[2] + Gr. komē, hair.]

me-troc′ra-cy, me-troc′ra-si, n. Government by the mother; matriarchy. [< Gr. mētēr, mother, + kratein, rule, < kratos, strength.]

met′ro-graph, met′ro-graf, n. An apparatus for registering the speed of a railway-train and the places and duration of stops. [< METRO-[2] + Gr. graphein, write.]

met″ro-i′a-con, n. [LL.] Pros. Same as GALLIAMBUS.

met-rol′o-gy, met-rol′o-ji. C. E. Wr. (mi-trol′-, J.; mi-trol′-, W.), n. The science that treats of systems of weights and measures, or of units of measure; also, a metrological treatise. [< METRO-[2] + -LOGY.]

—met″ro-log′ic-al, a.—met-rol′o-gist, n.

met″ro-ma′ni-a[1], met′ro-mē′ni-a or -mā′ni-a, n. A morbid passion for making verses. [< METRO-[2] + MANIA.]

—met″ro-ma′ni-ac[1], a. & n.

me″tro-ma′ni-a[2], n. Nymphomania. [< METRO-[1] + MANIA.]

me-trom′e-ter[1], n. Same as HYSTEROMETER. [< METRO-[1] + -METER.]

met-rom′e-ter[2], n. Same as METRONOME. [< METRO-[2] + -METER.]

me-tron′cus, me″tro-path′i-a, etc. See METRO-[1].

met′ro-nome, met′ro-nōm, n. An instrument for indicating and marking exact time in music. It consists of a pendulum whose period of vibration is regulated by a shifting or sliding weight. A correct metronome beats seconds when set at 60. See illus. below [< METRO-[2] + Gr. nomos, law, < nemein, assign.]

—met″ro-nom′ic, a. Relating to a metronome or to the time marked by it.—met-ron′o-my, n. The art, process, or act of measuring time by a metronome.

me″tro-nym′ic, a. & n. Same as MATRONYMIC.

met-trop′o-lis, me-trop′o-lis, n. 1. A chief city, either the capital or the largest or most important city of a state or country.

It has lately become the fashion to call the seat of government the 'metropolis.' E. A. FREEMAN Historical Essays second series, essay vii, p. 317. [MACM. '80.]

2. Eccl. The seat of a metropolitan bishop. 3. In ancient Greece, the mother city of a colony; as, Athens was the metropolis of Amphipolis. 4. Biol. That part of the area of distribution of a group of animals or plants which contains the largest number of species or individuals; a generic focus. [LL., < Gr. mētropolis, city, < mētēr, mother, + polis, city.] met′ro-pole†.

Synonyms: see CAPITAL.

met″ro-pol′i-tan, met″ro-pol′i-tan, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a metropolis or chief city.

We may . . . hope to find in the rural types of character a corrective to the dangers of a purely metropolitan society.
T. W. HIGGINSON Women and Men ch. 20, p. 103. [H. '88.]

2. Eccl. Of or pertaining to a presiding bishop or his see [< LL. metropolitanus, < metropolis; see METROPOLIS.] met-trop′o-lite†.

met″ro-pol′i-tan, n. 1. Eccl. (1) An archbishop who exercises a limited authority, derived from the head of the church, over the bishops of the same ecclesiastical province. (2) In the ancient church, the bishop of a metropolis or a province, who supervised a number of subordinate bishops and ranked next after a patriarch: a distinction still recognized in the modern Greek Church. 2. A citizen of the mother city, as opposed to a colonist

French manners and ideas were not those of the colonist, and there was a quiet assumption of superiority of the metropolitan over the provincial.
W. KINGSFORD Canada bk. xi, ch. II, p. 553. [R. & H. '89.]

3†. A metropolis. me-trop′o-lite†.—met″ro-pol′i-tan-ate, n. The office or see of a church metropolitan.—met″ro-pol′i-tan-ism, n. Metropolitan character.—met″ro-pol′i-tan-ize, vt. To make metropolitan or like a metropolis.

met″ro-po-lit′ic-al, met′ro-po-lit′ic-al, a. 1. Pertaining to a metropolis; metropolitan. 2. Eccl. Pertaining to the office or see of a metropolitan. met″ropol′i-tic†.

me″tror-rhe′a, etc. See METRO-[1].

Me″tro-si-de′ros, mi″(or mē″)tro-si-dē′ros or -dē′ros (met″-, W.), n. Bot. A genus of Pacific islands and New Zealand trees of the myrtle family (Myrtaceæ), with opposite leaves and dense terminal cymose clusters of beautiful flowers. The wood is hard and durable, that of M. robusta, the northern rata of New Zealand, being especially so. [< METRO-[1] + Gr. sidēros, iron.]

-metry, suffix. The science of measuring. [< Gr. -metria, measurement, < metron, measure.]

The single upper section, at right top corner (fig. 1), gives a perspective view of a cubic centimeter = $\frac{1}{1000}$ of the cubic decimeter (fig. 4) shown below in solid cube form = 1 gram weight of water = weight of $\frac{4}{100}$ of a dollar in United States subsidiary silver coin = .061 cubic inch = .27 fluid dram.

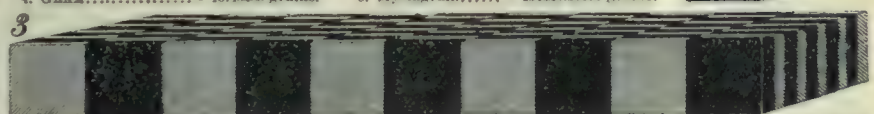
The block of 100 sections (fig. 3) = 100 cubic centimeters = $\frac{1}{10}$ of the cubic decimeter (fig. 4) shown below = 100 grams weight of water = weight of $\frac{4}{1}$ in United States subsidiary silver coin = 1 deciliter = 6.1022 cubic inches = .845 gill.

The calculation of weight in grains will show the plan of decimal ascent or descent of values:



1. Milligram.....	= 0.0154 grain.	5. Decagram.....	= 154.32356 grains.
2. Centigram.....	= 0.1543 grain.	6. Hectogram.....	= 1543.23563 grains.
3. Decigram.....	= 1.5432 grains.	7. Kilogram.....	= 15432.35639 grains.
4. GRAM.....	= 15.4323 grains.	8. Myriagram.....	= 154323.56390 grains.

The cube represented in fig. 4 gives a perspective view of 1 cubic decimeter = 1,000 cubic centimeters, each corresponding in size with the figure at right top corner = 1,000 grams of water (each weighing 15.432 grains) = 1 kilogram * = weight of $40 in U. S. subsidiary silver coin.

The liter, the unit for measures of capacity, is equal to this cubic decimeter. It contains 61.026 cubic inches = .1135 peck = .02838 bushel (United States, dry) = 1.0567 quarts = .26418 gallon (United States, liquid). The liter, being the unit for both wet and dry measure in the metric system, represents "the quantity of distilled water which, at its maximum density, will counterpoise the standard kilogram in a vacuum, the volume of such a quantity of water being, as nearly as has been ascertained, equal to a cubic decimeter." See MEASURE and METRIC SYSTEM.

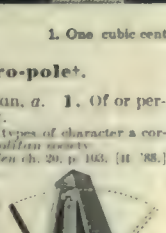
Relative values are given as follows for easy reference:



Milliliter = 1 cubic centimeter (fig. 1); centiliter = 10 cubic centimeters (fig. 2); deciliter = 100 cubic centimeters (fig. 3); liter = 1,000 cubic centimeters = cubic decimeter (fig. 4); decaliter = 10,000 cubic centimeters = 1 centistere; hectoliter = 100,000 cubic centimeters = 1 decistere; kiloliter = 1,000,000 cubic centimeters = 1 stere = 1 cubic meter; myriaiter = 10,000,000 cubic centimeters = 1 decastere.

Any denomination may be reduced to the next higher by dividing by 10 or by moving the decimal-point one place to the left; thus, 10,000,000 milliliters equal 1,000,000 centiliters, or 100,000 deciliters, or 10,000 liters, or 1,000 decaliters, or 100 hectoliters, or 10 kiloliters, or 1 myriaiter.

* The international standard kilogram is a block of platinum-iridium deposited at the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, near Paris, established by the concurrent action of the principal governments of the world. Its weight in vacuo is the same as that of the "kilogramme des Archives." The national prototype standard, apportioned to the United States under the direction of the International Committee, was received in 1890, and, with the meter standard, also of platinum-iridium, is in the custody of the office of Standard Weights and Measures (U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey), Washington, D. C.

The Metric System, Depicted and Explained.

1. One cubic centimeter. 2. Ten cubic centimeters. 3. One hundred cubic centimeters. 4. One thousand cubic centimeters (one cubic decimeter).

A Metronome.

met′ta-del†, n. A wine-measure containing a little more than a quart.

mette†, imp. of METE[2], v.—mette[2]†, imp. of METE[3], v.

met′tle, met′l, n. 1. The stuff or material of which a thing is composed; more particularly, constitutional temperament or disposition; specifically, courage; ardor.

God often gives us tasks we think too great for us . . . just that he may prove us, and see what is our mettle.
LAMAN ABBOTT Old Testament Shadows ch. 14, p. 208. [H. '70.]

2†. Metal. [A variant of METAL.]

Synonyms: see COURAGE.

—to put one on or to his mettle, to arouse one to his utmost endeavor or endurance.

met′tled, met′ld, a. High-spirited; mettlesome.

met′tle-some, met′l-sum, a. Having courage or spirit; high-spirited; courageous; ardent; fiery.—met′tle-some-ly, adv.—met′tle-some-ness, n.

met-u′si-ast, met-ū′si-ast, n. [Rare.] A believer in transubstantiation. C. [< Gr. metousiā, communion, < meta, with, + ousia; see HOMOOUSIAN.]

Me′um, mi′um or mē′um, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of herbs of the parsley family (Umbelliferæ). M. athamanticum is the common spignel, mew, or baldmoney of western and central Europe. [L., < Gr. mēon, spignel.]

meum, pron. [L.] Mine; belonging to me; used colloquially in the phrase meum and tuum, mine and thine, often substantively and without reference to the person addressed; as, he does not distinguish between the meum and tuum (meaning his property and another's).

meute, mūt, n. A mew for hawks. See MUTE[4], 1.

meve†, vt. To move.—me′va-ble†, a. Movable.

mev′y, mev′i, n. [-IES, pl.] A gull; mew. [< MEW[2], n.]

mew[1], miū, vi. To cry as a cat. [Imitative.]

—mew′er, n. One who or that which mews.

mew[2], vt. To shut up or in; immure; confine.

IRVING Wolfert's Roost, Birds of Spring p. 34. [G. P. P. '63.]

mew[3]†, v. I. t. To change or cast, as feathers or other covering; molt.

He may spread his feathers for a time, but he will mew them soon after. BACON Works, Essays, Of Greatness of Kingdoms in vol. i, p. 284. [H. G. B. '71.]

II. i. To change or cast feathers, covering, or the like. [< OF. muer, < L. muto; see MUTABLE.] mue†.

mew[4]† [Prov. Eng.], imp. of MOW[1], v.

mew[2], n. A gull, especially the European Larus canus. [< AS. mæw, mew.]

mew′gull‡. mew[3], n. 1. A cage for hawks or other birds while mewing or molting; meute; any cage for birds; hence, any enclosure or pen.

And I've been three weeks shut within my mew,
A-painting for the great man.
BROWNING Fra Lippo Lippi l. 47.

2. pl. A stable. See MEWS[1]. [< OF. mue, < muer; see MEW[3], v.] mew[4], n. [Dial.] A mow; haymow.

mew[5], n. The herb spignel. See MEUM. [< MEUM.]

mew′et†, a. Same as MUTE.

mewl, miūl, vi. 1. To cry as an infant. 2†. To mew as a cat. [Freq. of MEW[1], v.]

—mewl′er, n.

mewl, n. An infant's cry or crying.

PHIL. SOC.

mews[1], miūz, n. pl. A stable or set of stables in London in which the royal horses are kept: so called because built on the site formerly occupied by the mews or cages of the royal hawks; hence, in a singular sense, any city stable, or a court around which stables are located.

The echoing mews behind have a dry and massive appearance, as if they were reserved to stable the stone chargers of noble statues.
DICKENS Bleak House ch. 48, p. 721. [E. & L. '86.]

mews[2], n. [Prov. Eng.] Moss.
H. Diet.

mex-cal′, n. Same as MESCAL.

mex″i-cal′‡; mez-cal′‡.

Mex′i-can, mex′i-can. I. a. Of or pertaining to Mexico, a federal republic south of the United States, or to its people.

II. n. A native or naturalized inhabitant of Mexico.

—Mexican architecture, a branch of ancient American architecture the style of which is determinable only from the ruins of temples and so-called palaces found in Central America and Mexico, of masonry often of very large stones well hewn and jointed. They were low and square, the palaces in plan being simply renderings in stone of the ruder existing pueblo buildings, with small rooms connected with one another to a very slight extent. They possessed massive stone basements, no true arch or vault, a carved cornice, and mostly wooden roofs. When the covering is of stone, it is either of lintels or corbeled out in a pseudo-vault. The Mexican teocallis, or terraced temple-pyramids, such as those of Cholula and Teotihuacan, and the great mason-built pyramid of Xochicalco pierced by tunnels, show skill in handling stone, sun-dried brick, and other materials; the carvings and drawings, idols, and images are rude but effective; and the calendar-stone preserved at Mexico reveals curious knowledge of astronomy. See AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE, under AMERICAN, and illus. under TEOCALLI.—M. art, fine work in the precious metals, feathers, wood, mat-weaving, and pottery executed by the Indian natives.—M. vine, same as MADEIRA-VINE.

Ancient Mexican Art, as shown in the Decoration of a Vase.

Mex′i-can-ize, mex′i-can-īz, v. [-IZED; -IZING.] I. t. To cause to become like the Mexicans or Mexico, especially in respect to frequent revolutions.

II. i. To become like Mexico or the Mexicans.

Mey†, n. Same as MAY[2].

mey′ne†, n. Same as MEINY, mey′ny†.

mey′ne-al†, a. Menial.

mez′zail, n. Same as MESAIL.

Me-zen′tian, me-zen′shian, a. Relating to Mezentius, a fabled Etruscan king famed for his cruelty.

me-ze're-on, mę-zī'rę-on. n. An Old World low shrub (Daphne Mezereum) of the spurge-laurel or mezereon family (Thymelæaceæ), with purplish or rose-colored, rarely white flowers in lateral clusters on shoots of the preceding year before the leaves, and red berries: cultivated and sparingly naturalized in the United States. [< F. mézéréon, < Ar. mázaryūn, the camellia.] me-ze're-um‡; spurge'-ol"ive‡.

mez-quite', n. Same as MESQUIT¹.

mez'ur-a-bl, -ure, -ured. Measurable, etc. PH. S.

mez-u'zah, mez-ū zą, n. [-ZOTH, pl.] [Heb.] A parchment inscribed with the decalogue and the name of the Deity, and then enclosed in a cylindrical box and attached to the door-post.

mez"za-ma-jol'i-ca, med'za-ma-jel'i-ca, n. [It.] Ceram. A decorated and glazed earthenware made in Italy prior to the introduction of the majolica ware. The figures on it are traced in blue or black, the flesh is white, and the draperies are blue. See MAJOLICA.

mez'za-nine, mez'a-nin, C. W. (-nain, Wr.; metz'a-nin, E. I.), n. [F.] Arch. (1) A low story between two high ones: not necessarily extending over the same area. (2) A window broader than it is high.

mez'zo, med'zo, a. [It.] Half; medium; moderate. mez'za‡ [fem.]. — mez"zo for"te, moderately loud. — m. piano, moderately soft. — mez"zo-ri-lie'vo, n. Sculpture, or a piece of sculpture, in half-relief; demi-rilievo. See ALTO-RILIEVO; BAS-RELIEF. — m. soprano, a voice lower than a soprano and higher than a contralto. — m. tenore, a voice between a basso and a tenor; a low tenor or baritone.

mez'zo-tint, mez'o-tint (XIII), vt. To engrave in or represent by mezzotint; cause to appear as if in mezzotint.

Perhaps there is at first a faint breeze, just enough to fret the water, and roughen or mezzotint the reflections of the shore. STARR KING White Hills, Lake Winnipiseogee p. 52. [N. & H.'70.]

— mez'zo-tint"er, n.

mez'zo-tint, n. 1. A method of copperplate engraving in which the entire surface of the plate is slightly roughened, after which the drawing is traced, and then the portions intended to show high lights and middle lights are scraped or burnished while the shadows are strengthened. 2. An impression from a plate so produced, characterized by an even gradation of tones, resembling those of a photograph. Called also mezzotint engraving.

Of all kinds of engraving mezzotint comes nearest to nature, though it is far from being the best as a means of artistic expression. HAMERTON in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. viii, p. 445.

mho, mō, n. Elec. The practical unit of conductivity, being the reciprocal of the ohm: a word proposed by Sir William Thomson. [< OHM reversed.]

mho'me-ter, mō'mę-tęr, n. Elec. An instrument for measuring conductivity. [< MHO + -METER.]

mhorr, n. Same as MOHR.

mi, mī, n. 1. The third note of the diatonic scale; a syllable used in sol-faing. 2. The note E. [It., orig. taken from first syllable of L. mira, word in a Latin hymn. See SOLMIZATION.]

mi'a-mi"a, mī'a-mī'a, n. [Austral.] An aboriginal house.

Mi-a'mis, mai-ā'miz, n. pl. A tribe of North-American Indians of the Algonkian stock. See AMERICAN.

mi-an'a-bug", mi-an'a-bug", n. A mite (Argas persicus) of Persia and Egypt, inflicting a painful and sometimes fatal bite. [< Miana, town in Persia, + BUG.]

mi-aou'li, mi-au'li, n. A volatile oil, resembling cajuput-oil, derived from the Melaleuca flaviflora, and exported chiefly from New Caledonia to Japan and other Eastern countries.

mi-ar'gy-rite, mai-ār'ji-rait, n. Mineral. A submetallic, adamantine, iron-black silver sulfantimonite ($AgSbS_2$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system. [< Gr. melon, less, + argyros, silver.]

mi-ar"o-lit'ic, mi-ar'o-lit'ic, a. Of or pertaining to that structure in granitic rocks in which the magma has shrunk and left numerous small cavities, so as to resemble the distinct crystalline structure known as saccharoidal. [< Gr. miaros, defiled (< miainō, stain), + lithos, stone.]

mi'as, mai'as, n. [Malay.] The orang-utan.

mi-ask'ite, mi-ask'ait, n. Petrol. A granular, slaty, orthoclase-elæolite rock. [< Miask, in Siberia.] mi-asc'ite‡; mi-asc'yte‡.

mi-as'ma, mi-az'ma or mai- (XIII), n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Morbific exhalation from putrescent matter, animal or vegetable; malarial poison; swamp-gas; malaria.

The cool, clear, delightful autumn weather set in — most treacherous of all the seasons in Palestine, as the sun then draws out the reeking miasma from the softened ground. C. R. CONDER Tent Work in Palestine vol. ii, ch. 1, p. 26. [A. '78.]

[< Gr. miasma, pollution, < miainō, pollute.] mi'asm‡. — mi-as'mal, a. Abounding in miasma; miasmatic; as, miasmal localities. — mi-as'ma-tist, n. One who studies miasmatic phenomena, or is expert in treating miasmatic diseases. — mi-as'ma-tous, a. Med. Productive of, abounding in, or due to miasma; as, miasmatous regions; miasmatous diseases. mi-as'mous‡. — mi"as-mol'o-gy, n. The branch of medical science that treats of miasmatic phenomena; also, a treatise on miasma.

mi"as-mat'ic, mai'az-mat'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or produced by miasma or malaria; malarious.

In some provinces [of Italy] which formerly supported large and flourishing populations, miasmatic influences are now so prevalent as to forbid any other than a desultory and imperfect cultivation of the soil. J. C. RIDPATH Cyc. Univ. Hist. vol. ii, bk. x, pt. i, ch. 52, p. 39. [J. B. & CO.]

[< Gr. miasma(t-); see MIASMA.] mi"as-mat'ic-al‡; mi-as'mic‡.

mi'ca, mai'ca, n. Mineral. A class of silicates, having a prismatic angle of 120°, eminently perfect basal cleavage, affording thin, tough laminæ or scales, colorless to jet-black, transparent to translucent, of widely varying chemical composition, and crystallizing in the monoclinic system. Called also isinglass, Muscovy glass.

The composition of micas is very complex, but they are essentially silicates of aluminum (sometimes partially replaced by iron, chromium, etc.) and an alkali, as potassium, sodium, or lithium. The chief varieties are muscovite, or potassium mica; paragonite, or sodium mica; lepidolite, or lithium mica; zinnwaldite, or lithium-iron mica; biotite, or magnesium-iron mica; phlogopite, or magnesium mica; lepidomelane, or iron mica; and roscoelite, or vanadium mica. (See these words.) These embrace very many subspecies.

— mica diorite, a variety of diorite in which mica replaces hornblende. — mi'ca-pow"der, n. A giant powder made of nitroglycerin absorbed by mica instead of by siliceous earth as in dynamite. See EXPLOSIVE. — m.-schist, n. Geol. A rock consisting mainly of mica, generally with considerable quartz and some other minerals, and dividing readily into slabs. Called also, less frequently, mica-slate.

Mica-slate or mica-schist contains a still larger proportion of mica than gneiss. S. W. JOHNSON How Crops Feed div. ii, ch. 2, p. 119. [O. J. CO. '79.]

mi-ca'ce-o-cal-ca're-ous, mi-kē"sę-ō-cal-kē'rę-us, a. Geol. Containing mica and calcite. [< MICACEOUS + CALCAREOUS.]

mi-ca'ceous, mi-kē'shius, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, consisting of, or containing mica. 2. Resembling mica; laminated; sparkling. [< L. mica; see MICA.]

Mi'cah, mai'cā, n. One of the minor prophetical books of the Old Testament, containing the prophecies of Micah (about 757–700 B. C.) foretelling the fall of Samaria and Jerusalem and the coming of a ruler to be born in Bethlehem. [< Heb. Mikhah, lit. "like Jehovah."] mice, mais, n. Plural of MOUSE.

mi-cel'la, mi-sel'a, n [-LÆ, -lī or -lē, pl.] One of the theoretical structural particles which, according to the hypothesis of Nägeli, make up organized bodies: supposed from the optical properties of various elements of plant-structure to be biaxial crystals, each enveloped by a film of water. [Dim. of L. mica, crum.]

— mi-cel'lar, a. Of or pertaining to micellæ; as, the micellar hypothesis.

mi'chael, mai'kel, n. A kind of sweet orange brought from St. Michael's Island, one of the Azores.

Mich'ael-mas, mik'el-mas, n. 1. Eccl. The feast of St. Michael, occurring Sept. 29; in England one of the quarterly rent-days. 2. [Colloq.] Autumn.

— Michaelmas moon [Scot.], the harvest-moon.

miche, mich, vi. [Archaic or Prov. Eng.] 1. To retire or shrink from view; lie hid; skulk; sneak. 2. To pilfer sneakingly; commit a skulking crime. meach‡; meech‡; mich‡; mouch‡. — mich'er‡, n. A sneak-thief; an idler; skulker. — mich'er-y‡, n. Theft; sneaking fraud. — mich'ing, pa. Skulking; thieving. — mich'ing, n. A sneaking or skulking.

mich'el‡, a. & n. Mickle.

Mi"chel-an"gel-esque', mī"kel-ān"jel-esc'(mai"kel-an"-, C.), a. Belonging to or characteristic of the Italian sculptor, painter, and architect Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475–1564), famous for his boldness of pose, powerful movement, and strongly accentuated anatomy, or to his school, which in general lacked his power and exaggerated his defects. — Mi"chel-an'gel-ism, n. The artistic methods or tendencies of Michelangelo or of his school.

Mi-che'li-a, mai-kī'li-a or -cg'li-a, n. Bot. A genus of Asiatic trees of the magnolia family (Magnoliaceæ), with magnolia-like leaves and large solitary flowers. See CHAMPAK. [< Michéli, Florentine botanist.]

mick'le, mic'l. [Archaic or Scot.] I. a. 1. Large; great; as, a mickle man. 2. Much; many; as, mickle men.

At the great minster window Sat the king in mickle state. CHATTERTON Death of Sir Charles Bawdin st. 46.

II. n. 1. A large amount or quantity; abundance. 2. By corruption, a small amount or quantity; as, many mickles make a muckle. 3†. Greatness; bigness. [< AS. micel, great.] mei'kle‡; moch'el†; muck'le‡.

mick'le-ness†, n. Great size.

mick'y, mik'i, n. [MICK'IES, pl.] 1. [Slang, U. S.] An Irish lad or boy. 2. [Austral.] A young wild bull. [C.] [Dim. of Mike, abbr. of Michael, m. proper name.]

Mic'mac, } mic'mac, n. One of a North-American tribe Mic'mak, } of the Algonkian stock of Indians. See AMERICAN.

mi'co, mī'cō, C. W.[2] (mai'co, I. W.[1] Wr.), n. [S. Am.] A marmoset (Hapale argentatus).

Mi-co'ni-a, mai-[or mī-]cō'ni-a, n. Bot. A vast genus of tropical American shrubs or trees of the melastoma family (Melastomaceæ), a few species of which are in cultivation for their beautiful foliage. [< Micon, Spanish physician and botanist.]

micr-, } mai'cr- or mī'cr-, -cro- (mic'rō-, C.). Derived micro-, } from Greek mikros, small; combining forms. In physics micro- is sometimes used to signify one-millionth; as, microvolt (one-millionth of a volt). — mi"cra-cous'tic, a. Same as MICROCOUSTIC. — mi"cra-nat'o-my, n. Microscopic anatomy. — mi-cran'der, n. Bot. One of the small or dwarf male plants produced by certain confervoid algæ. They are developed from androspores which, after swarming, have attached themselves to a definite spot on the female plant, each when mature consisting of only two or three cells, the uppermost of which is an antheridium. — Mi-crau'li-ca, n. pl. Zool. A section of vertebrates with a small aula and cerebral hemispheres vertically expanded, including mammals, birds, reptiles, amphibians, and dipnoans. — mic-rau'lic, a. — mi"cren-ceph-a'li-a, n. — mi"cren-ceph'al-ic, a. Small-brained. mi"cren-ceph'a-lous‡. — mi"cren-ceph'a-lism, n. — mi"cren-ceph'a-lus, n. — mi"cren-ceph'a-ly, n. — mi"cris-tol'o-gy, n. Microscopic histology. mi"cro-his-tol'o-gy‡. — mi-cris'to-log'ic-al, a. — mi"cro-am"pere', n. Elec. One-millionth of an ampere. — mi"cro-au'di-phone, n. An instrument for rendering audible very feeble sounds. — mi"cro-ba-cil'lus, n. A form of bacterium varying from a cube to a short prism. — Mi"cro-bac-te'ri-a, n. pl. Biol. A group of bacteria having short cylindrical or rod-like cells, including Bacterium. — mi"cro-bac-te'ri-um, n. — Mi"cro-bi"o-the'ri-a, n. pl. Mam. An order of ungulate mammals. — mi"cro-bi"o-the'ri-an, a. & n. — mi"cro-bleph'a-ry, n. Unusual smallness of the eyelids. — mi"cro-brach'i-a, n. Extreme smallness of the arms. — mi"cro-brach'i-us, n. An individual having exceedingly small arms. — mi"cro-cal'throps, n. Spong. A minute calthrops. mi"cro-cal'trops‡. — Mi"cro-cam'e-ræ, n. pl. Spong. A division of a major group of sponges, as Choristida or Ceratosa, with small chambers. — mi"cro-cam'er-ate, a. — mi"cro-car'di-a, n. Unusual smallness of the heart. — mi"cro-ceph-al'ic, a. Having an unusually small skull; in craniometry, having a capacity of or below 1,150 cubic centimeters (Topinard), or below 1,350 cubic centimeters (Quain): said of a skull. — mi"cro-ceph'a-lism, n. — mi"cro-ceph'a-lous, a. Microcephalic. — mi"cro-ceph'a-lus, n. Teratol. A monster having a very small or imperfect head, resulting in idiocy. — mi"cro-ceph'a-ly, n. Abnormal smallness of the head; imperfect development of the cranium. mi"cro-ceph-a'li-a‡. — mi"cro-chem'ic-al-ly, adv. — mi"cro-chem'is-try, n. The application of chemistry or chemical methods to objects under the microscope. — mi"cro-chi'-lous, a. Small-lipped. mi"cro-chei'lous‡. — mi"cro-chi'li-a, n. — Mi"cro-chi-rop'te-ra, n. pl. Mam. The Animalivora. — mi"cro-chi-rop'te-ran, a. & n. — mi"cro-chi-rop'ter-ous, a. — mi"cro-chi'rous, a. Small-handed. mi"cro-chei'rous‡. — mi"cro-chi'ri-a, n. — Mi"cro-cho"a-ni'tes, n. pl. Conch. A section of cliipochaonoidal nautiloideans with short septal funnels. — mi"cro-cho'a-nite, n. — mi"cro-chro-nom'e-ter, n. A chronograph for measuring minute intervals of time. — mi"cro-clas'tic, a. [Rare.] Geol. Clastic or fragmental, as rock composed of minute particles. — mi'cro-clin(e), n. Mineral. A vitreous, colorless, grayish, reddish, greenish, or green translucent potash feldspar ($KAlSi_3O_8$), crystallizing in the triclinic system. See FELDSPAR. — mi"cro-cnem'ic, a. Having short or small legs. — mi"cro-cne'mi-a, n. — mi"cro-coc'cal, a. Pertaining to or produced by micrococci. — Mi"cro-coc'cus, n. Biol. 1. A genus of Sphærobacteria whose cells are spherical. 2. [m-] A bacterium of this genus. The micrococci are divided into pigment-forming (chromogenic), disease-producing (pathogenic), and ferment-producing (zymogenic) forms. See illus. under BACTERIUM. — mi"cro-co-nid'i-um, n. Bot. A conidium of small size when those of a species are noticeably distinguishable into two sizes. — mi"cro-cor'ne-a, n. Unusual smallness of the cornea. — Mi"cro-co-tyl'i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of polystomean monogenous trematodes with two small anterior suckers and many posterior ones. Mi"cro-cot'y-le, n. (t. g.) — mi"cro-co-tyl'id, n. — mi"cro-cot'y-loid, a. — mi"cro-cou'lomb', n. Elec. One-millionth of a coulomb. — mi"cro-cous'tic, I. a. Adapted to render weak sounds audible. II. n. An instrument serving to augment faint sounds; an auricle. — mi"cro-cra'ni-a, n. The condition of having a small cranium. — mi"cro-cra'ni-us, n. An individual having a small cranium. — mi"cro-cra'nous, a. Craniom. Having a capacity, in males, of 1,540 to 1,630 cubic centimeters; in females, 1,420 to 1,500 cubic centimeters: said of a skull. — mi'cro-crith, n. Chem. The weight of the hydrogen atom: used as a unit in the comparison of molecular weights. — mi"cro-crys'tal-lin(e), a. 1. Cryptocrystalline. 2. Designating such mineral structure as can be recognized as crystalline, but of which the constituent minerals can not be distinguished: so used by Rosenbusch. Compare CRYPTOCRYSTALLINE. — mi"cro-crys'tal-lit'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a metamorphic rock in which the devitrification has continued until the original glassy material has changed into little granules, needles, and hairs. — mi'cro-cyst, n. Biol. An intercalated resting-stage assumed in Myxomycetes by swarm-spores under unfavorable conditions, such as lack of warmth and moisture. Compare MACROCYST. — mi"cro-cyte, n. Biol. A small cell, as the small blood-corpuscles found in cases of anemia. — mi"cro-cy-the'mi-a, n. Pathol. A vitiated condition of the blood in which there are present numerous abnormally small red corpuscles. mi"cro-cy-thæ'mi-a‡. — mi"cro-cy-to'sis, n. Pathol. The presence or production of red corpuscles abnormally small in the blood. — mi"cro-dac-tyl'i-a, n. The condition of having short fingers. mi"cro-dac'tyl-ism‡. — mi"cro-dac'tyl-ous, a. Having unusually small fingers and toes. mi"cro-dac'tyl‡; mi"cro-dac'tyle‡. — mi'cro-dont, a. Having unusually small teeth. mi"cro-den'tous‡. — mi"cro-dont-ism, n. Smallness of the teeth. — Mi"cro-dril'i, n. pl. Helminth. A group or order of lumbricomorph worms without a capillary network of blood-vessels on the nephridium; water-worms. — mi"cro-far'ad, n. Elec. One-millionth of a farad: the practical unit of electrical capacity. — mi"cro-fel'site, n. Petrol. An apparently isotropic substance consisting of exceedingly small microscopic scales, fibers, or grains, found in some porphyries. It is probably a submicroscopic aggregate of quartz and feldspar. — mi"cro-fel-sit'ic, a. — mi"cro-fo"li-a'tion, n. Geol. A microscopic foliation in rocks. — mi'cro-form, n. An extremely minute form of organic life. — mi"cro-ge'ni-a, n. Imperfect development of the chin. — mi"cro-ge"o-log'ic-al, a. Pertaining to microgeology. — mi"cro-ge-ol'o-gy, n. The department of geology that is concerned with the study of microscopic structures. — mi"cro-glos'si-a, n. Extreme smallness of the tongue. — Mi"cro-glos'si-dæ, n. pl. Ornith. The Cacatuidæ. Mi"cro-glos'sa, n. (t. g.) — mi"cro-glos'soid, a. — Mi"cro-glos-si'næ, n. pl. Ornith. The Cacatuinæ. — mi"cro-glos'sine, a. & n. — Mi-crog'na-thæ, n. pl. Arach. A division of spiders having the mandibles reduced and maxillæ closely surrounding the lip, as in Scytodidæ, etc. — mi"crog-nath'i-a, n. Smallness of the jaws, especially of the lower jaw. mi"crog-nath'ism‡. — mi-crog'na-thous, a. Having small jaws. — mi"cro-go-nid'i-al, a. Of or pertaining to a microgonidium. — mi"cro-go-nid'i-um, n. 1. Bot. A gonidium of small size when those produced by a species are clearly distinguishable into two sizes. Compare MACROGONIDIUM. 2. Protoz. A minute individual formed by division, as in certain flagellate infusorians, and regarded as equivalent to a spermatozoon. — mi'cro-gram, n. One-millionth part of a gram. — mi'cro-gran'ite, n. Petrol. A finely crystalline rock consisting of quartz, feldspar, and mica. — mi"cro-gra-nit'ic, a. Petrol. Of or pertaining to microgranite. — mi"cro-gran"u-lit'ic, a. Same as MICROGRANITIC. — mi"cro-gyr'i-a, n. Smallness of the convolutions of the brain. — mi"cro-his-tol'o-gy, n. Micristology. — mi"cro-his"to-log'ic-al, a. — mi-crohm', n. Elec. One-millionth of an ohm. — mi"cro-len'tis, n. The condition of having an unusually small crystalline lens of the eye. — Mi"cro-lep"i-dop'te-ra, n. pl. Entom. The small moths, as Tineidæ, etc. — mi"cro-lep"i-dop'ter, n. — mi"cro-lep"i-dop'ter-an, a. & n. — mi"cro-lep"i-dop'ter-ist, n. A student of the Microlepidoptera. — mi"cro-lep"i-dop'ter-ous, a. Of or pertaining to the Microlepidoptera. — mi"cro-les'tes, n. A small Triassic mammal (genus Microlestes), the first Mesozoic mammal discovered. — mi'cro-lite, n. 1. Mineral. A vitreous or resinous pale-yellow to brown, translucent to opaque calcium pyrotantalate ($Ca_2Ta_2O_7$), containing also columbium and other oxids, crystallizing in the isometric system. 2. Petrol. A microlith. — mi"cro-li'ter, n. One-millionth of a liter. — mi'cro-lith, n. One of the microscopic isotropic needle- and rod-shaped bodies found in vitrophyric rocks.—mi″cro-lith′ic, a. 1. Composed or constructed of small stones: opposed to megalithic. 2. Petrol. Of the nature of microliths. mi″cro-li′ic‡.—Mi″cro-mas-tic′to-ra, n. pl. Spong. A section of sponges with small choanocytes, including the Silicispongiæ and Myrospongiæ.—mi″cro-ma′zi-a, n. Unusual smallness of the breast or mammary gland.—mi″cro-me′li-a, n. Unusual smallness of the limbs.—mi-cro′me-lus, n. [Mi″cro-me′li-a, pl.] Terat. An individual with micromelia.—mi″cro-me-rit′ic, a. Lithol. Of or pertaining to a crystalline structure so fine that it can only be recognized by a microscope.—mi″cro-mer-rol′o-gy, n. Microscopic anatomy.—mi″cro-mil′li-me″ter, n. 1. One-millionth of a millimeter. 2. One-thousandth of a millimeter; a micron. mi″cro-mil′li-me″tre‡.—mi″cro-min″er-a-log′ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to micromineralogy.—mi″cro-min″er-al′o-gy, n. Mineral. Microscopic mineralogy.—mi″cro-my-el′i-a, n. Terat. Congenital smallness of the spinal cord.—mi″cro-nom′e-ter, n. A microchronometer.—mi″cro-nu′cle-us, n. A small nucleus, especially the smaller of two nuclei, as in Infusorians.—mi-cron′y-my, n. The use of short, easy words.—mi″cro-or′gan-ism, n. A microscopic organism, as a microbe or bacterium.—mi″cro-or-gan′ic, a.—mi″cro-pan′to-graph, n. A pantograph used for exceedingly minute writing or drawing.—mi″cro-par′a-site, n. A parasitic micro-organism.—mi″cro-par″a-sit′ic, a.—mi″cro-path″o-log′ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to micropathology.—mi″cro-pa-thol′o-gist, n. One versed in micropathology.—mi″cro-pa-thol′o-gy, n. Med. 1. The branch of pathologic science that relates to minute organisms as sources of disease. 2. The microscopic study of morbid transformations in minute anatomical tissues; microscopic pathology.—mi″cro-peg′ma-tite, n. Petrol. An intimate microscopic structure of quartz and feldspar. mi″cro-peg′ma-tyte‡.—mi″cro-peg″ma-tit′ic, a. Lithol. Of or pertaining to rocks of a microscopic pegmatitic structure.—mi″cro-perth′ite, n. Petrol. An orthoclase containing microscopic patches and lamellæ of intercalated triclinic feldspar.—mi″cro-per-thit′ic, a.—mic-roph′a-gist, n. An animal that feeds upon micro-organisms.—mi″cro-pho′to-graph, n. 1. A microscopic photograph of any object, as a writing, picture, etc. 2. See PHOTOMICROGRAPH.—mi″cro-pho′to-graph′ic, a.—mi″cro-pho-tog′ra-phy, n. The art or process of producing microphotographs.—mi″croph-thal′mic, a. Having small eyes. mi″croph-thal′mous‡.—mi″croph-thal′mus, n. A microphthalmic individual.—mi″croph-thal″my, n. Pathol. The state of having an abnormally small eye. mi″croph-thal′mi-a‡.—mi″cro-phyl′lin, e. a. Bot. Composed of or having minute leaves, scales, or scale-like leaves.—mi″cro-phyl′lous, a. Bot. Small-leaved.—mi″cro-phys″i-og′ra-phy, n. Same as PETROGRAPHY.—mi″cro-phy′tal, a. Of or pertaining to microphytes.—mi′cro-phyte, n. A microscopic plant, generally parasitic.—mi″cro-phyt′ic, a. Relating to or produced by microphytes.—mi″cro-por′phy-rit′ic, a. Microscopically porphyritic.—mi″cro-pro-so′pi-a, n. Abnormal smallness of the face.—mi″cro-pro-so′pous, a. Having an unusually small face; in craniometry, having the capacity of the face, in males, 470 to 540 cubic centimeters; in females, 405 to 435 cubic centimeters.—mi″cro-pro-so′pus, n. 1. Terat. An individual with a small, imperfectly developed face. 2. [M-] In the cabalistic system, the Lesser Countenance, a name given to all the Sephiroth excepting Kether. See SEPHIRA.—Mi″cro-pro-top′i-diæ, n. pl. Crust. A family of cerophine amphipods with coxopodites of pereiopods and maxillipeds broad. Mi″cro-pro-tops, n. (t. g.)—mi″cro-pro′to-pid, n.—mi″cro-pro′to-poid, a.—mi-crop′si-a, n. Pathol. A condition of vision in which objects appear unnaturally small mi-crop′i-a‡. mi-crop′ter-ous, a. Having short fins or wings.—Mi″crop-te-ryg′i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of jugate moths with mandibles, free palpi, and ligula. Mi-crop′te-ryx, n. (t. g.)—mi″crop-ter′y-gid, a. & n.—mi″crop-ter′y-goid, a.—mi″cro-pus, n. One who has small feet.—mi″cro-py″lar, a. Of or pertaining to a micropyle.—mi′cro-pyle, n. 1, Bot. The aperture in the coats of an ovule through which the pollen-tube penetrates: applied also to the corresponding part in the seed. 2, An aperture in the vitelline membrane of the ovum, serving to admit a spermatozoon, or assisting in the nourishment of the ovum.—mi″cro-rhabd, n. Spong. A rod-shaped microsclere.—mi″cror-rhe″o-met′ric-al, a. Noting a method of determining the nature of solutions flowing through small or capillary tubes.—Mi″cro-sau′ri, n. pl. Herp. A Carboniferous order or suborder of stegocephalous amphibians without centra, intercentra supporting neural arches. Mi″cro-sau′ri-an‡.—mi″cro-sau′ri-an, a. & n.—mi″cro-sce′lous, a. Having very small legs.—mi″cro-sce′li-a, n. The state of being microscelous.—mi′cro-sclere, n. Spong. One of the small scattered spicules of a sponge. mi″cro-scle′ron‡. mi″cro-scle′rum‡.—mi″cro-scle′rous, a.—Mi″cro-scle-roph′o-ra, n. pl. Spong. A tribe of choristidan sponges without megascleres.—mi″cro-scle-roph′o-rous, a.—mi″cro-sec′tion, n. A transparently thin section of some substance mounted for examination with the microscope.—mi′cro-seism, n. A very slight tremor or vibration of the earth's crust.—mi″cro-seis′mic, a. Pertaining to or having the characteristics of microseisms.—mi″cro-seis′mic-al‡.—mi″cro-seis-mom′e-ter, n. An apparatus for indicating the direction, duration, and intensity of microseisms. mi″cro-seis′mo-graph‡.—mi″cro-seis-mom′e-try, n. The art of measuring microseisms.—mi′cro-seme, n. Cranium Having an orbital index below 84: said of a skull.—mi″cro-se′mi-a, n. The state of being microseme.—mi″cro-sep′tum, n. Zoöph. A small sterile septum, as in corals.—mi″cro-si′phon, n. Conch. A small siphon of certain cephalopods.—mi″cro-si-phon′i-a, n. Conch. The larval stage of certain cephalopods when the microsiphon appears.—mi″cro-si-phon′u-lar, a. Of or pertaining to a microsiphon.—mi″cro-si-phon″u-la′tion, n.—mi″cro-smat′ic, a. Having the organs of smell comparatively feebly developed, as man and apes.—mi″cro-so′ma, n. [L., pl. Bot. A minute eccentric corpuscle embedded in the endoplasmal layer of the protoplasm of an active vegetable cell. The great numbers of them present contribute to the granular appearance of protoplasm. mi′cro-some‡. mi″cro-so-ma′ti-a. mi″cro-so′mi-a, n. Smallness of body.—mi″cro-som′ic, a. Having a very small body. mi″cro-so′mous‡.—mi″cro-so′mite, n. 1. A small secondary somite or metamere of the body of an animal. 2. Mineral. A transparent, colorless alkaline silicate, $(Na,K)_3Ca_4Al_3Si_{12}O_{32}Cl$, that crystallizes in the hexagonal system.—mi″cro-so-mit′ic, a.—mi″cro-spec′tro-scope, n. A combination of the microscope and spectroscope for observing the absorptive spectrum of a minute body.—mi″cro-spec-tros′co-py, n. Examination by means of the microspectroscope.—mi″cro-sphyx′i-a, n. Pathol. The state of having an abnormal weakness or smallness of the pulse.—mi″cro-spo-ran′gi-o-phore, n. [-PHO′RA, pl.] Bot. A sporophore bearing a microsporangium.—mi″cro-spo-ran′gi-um, n. Bot. A sporangium producing or containing microspores. mi″cro-spo′range‡.—mi′cro-spore, n. 1. Bot. A small asexually produced spore, male in function, when the spores produced by a species are clearly distinguishable into two sizes, as in Selaginella. Compare MACROSPORE. 2. Protoz. One of the smaller of the two kinds of anisospores.—mi″cro-spor′ic, a.—mi″cro-spo′rous, a.—mi″cro-spor′in‡, n. Like a small spore: said of certain micrococci supposed to be found in cases of diphtheria.—Mi-cros′po-ron, n. 1. A genus of fungi producing skin-diseases. 2. [m-] A fungus of this genus.—Mi-cros′the-na, n. pl. Mam. The Inæquabilia.—mi′cro-sthene, n.—mi″cro-sthen′ic, a.—Mi″cro-sto′ma-ta, n. pl. Herp. The Angiostomata.—mi′cro-stome, n. Bot. A small mouth, as that possessed by certain moss-capsules.—mi″cro-sto′mi-a, n.—Mi″cro-stom′i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of rhabdocœlous worms with the pharynx simple and mouth small, and asexual as well as sexual reproduction. Mi-cros′toma, n. (t. g.) Mi″cro-stom′i-da‡.—mi-cros′to-mid, a.—mi-cros′to-moid, a.—mi-cros′to-mous, a. Having an unusually small mouth. mi″cro-stom′a-tous‡.—mi″cro-stron′gy-lon, n. Spong. A small strongyle.—mi″cro-struc′ture, n. Minutely small structure.—mi″cro-sty′lar, a. Of or pertaining to a minute style or column.—mi″cro-sty′lous, a. Bot. Having a small or short style as compared with others produced in flowers of the same species. Compare DIMORPHISM.—mi″cro-ta-sim′e-ter, n. Elec. An instrument for measuring minute differences of pressure, by the variations caused thereby in the electric resistance of a button of compressed lampblack in the circuit of a delicate galvanometer.—mi″cro-tel′e-phone, n. Elec. A telephone specially adapted for transmitting and rendering audible very faint sounds.—mi″cro-tel″e-phon′ic, a.—mi′cro-therm, n. A plant of De Candolle's fourth physiological group, requiring a climate of a mean annual temperature from 32° to 58° Fahr.—mi′cro-tome, n. One of various instruments for making very thin sections for microscopic observations.—mi″cro-tom′ic, a. Pertaining to the microtome or to microtomy; making thin slices. mi″cro-tom′ic-al‡.—mi-crot′o-mist, n. An expert in microtomy.—mi-crot′o-my, n. The art of preparing thin sections for microscopic investigation.—mi′cro-tous, a. Having unusually small ears.—mi″cro-trich′i-a, n. Unusual fineness of the hair.—mi′cro-volt, n. One-millionth of a volt.—mi-crox′e-a, n. [-E., pl. Spong. A small oxeate spicule.—Mi″cro-zo′a, n. pl. Zool. Animalcules.—mi″cro-zo′al, a.—mi″cro-zo′an, a. & n.—Mi″cro-zo-a′ri-a, n. pl. Zool. Animalcules.—mi″cro-zo-a′ri-an, a. & n.—mi″cro-zo′u-ry, n. mi″cro-zo′oid, n. Protoz. A microgonidium, as in vorticelloid Infusorians.—mi″cro-zo′on, n. One of the Microzoa.—mi″cro-zo′o-spore, n. Bot. A small zoospore as compared with others produced by the same species.—mi′cro-zyme, n. A microbe or bacterium supposed to act like a ferment in producing certain diseases.

Microstructure of Micropegmatite.

mi″cro-bac-te′ri-a, etc. See MICRO-.

mi′crobe, mai′crōb or mic′rōb (XIII), n. A microscopic organism, especially a bacterium. Decay, fermentation, and various infectious diseases are attributed to their presence and instrumentality. See illus. under BACTERIUM. [F., < Gr. mikros, small, + bios, life.] mi-cro′bi-on‡ [-BI-A, pl.].

—mi-cro′bi-al, a. Relating to or of the nature of microbes; produced by or infected with microbes. mi-cro′bi-an‡; mi-cro′bic‡. mi-cro′bi-cide, n. Any substance or agent that destroys microbes; microbe-killer.—mi″cro-bi-ol′o-gy, n. The science or study of microbes. mi″cro-bi″o-log′ic-al, a.—mi″cro-bi-ol′o-gist, n.

mi′cro-cosm, mai′cro-cezm or mic′ro-, n. 1. A little world; the world or universe on a small scale; hence, man, as if combining in himself all the elements of the macrocosm or great world: opposed to macrocosm.

> An organic being is a microcosm—a little universe, formed of a host of self-propagating organisms, inconceivably minute and numerous as the stars in heaven. DARWIN Variations of Animals and Plants ch. 27, p. 399. [J. M. '75.]

2. A little community. [< F. microcosme, < LL. microcosmus, < Gr. mikrokosmos, < mikros, small, + kosmos, world.] mi″cro-cos′mos or -mus‡.

mi″cro-cos′mic, a. Relating to or of the nature of a microcosm; epitomizing the world. mi″cro-cos′mi-an‡; mi″cro-cos′mic-al‡. mi″cro-cos-mog′ra-phy, n. The description of man as the microcosm or little world.—mi″cro-cos-mol′o-gy, n. A treatise on the microcosm, or on the human body, or man as such.

mi″cro-dac′ty-lous. mi″cro-far′ad, etc. See MICRO-.

mi′cro-graph, mai′cro-graf or mic′ro-, n. 1. A pantograph instrument for minute writing, drawing, or engraving. 2. A microscopic picture. [< MICRO- + -GRAPH.] mi-crog′ra-pher, n. A specialist in micrography. mi-crog′ra-phist‡.

—mi″cro-graph′ic, a.—mi-crog′ra-phy, n. The description of microscopic objects.

Micrographophone.

r, recording-cylinder, driven by motor within the case (c); d, diaphragm-cell for producing a record. q, quadruple diaphragm for the reproduction of a wide range of sounds; t, talking-tube, which is swung into the place occupied by f when a record is to be made.

mi″cro-graph′o-phone, mai′cro-graf′o-fōn or mic′ro-, n. An instrument for recording and reproducing very faint sounds: practically a graphophone with unusually delicate diaphragms. See illus. in preceding column. [< MICRO- + GRAPHOPHONE.]

mi-crol′o-gy, mai-crel′o-ji or mic-rel′-, n. 1. The branch of science that treats of microscopic objects or is dependent on microscopic investigations. 2. Hence, undue attention to minute and unimportant matters. [< MICRO- + -LOGY.]—mi″cro-log′ic, mi″cro-log′ic-al, a.—mi″cro-log′ic-al-ly, adv.

mi′cro-mer″al, mai′cro-mir″al or mic′ro-, a. Of or pertaining to a micromere. mi″cro-mer′ic‡.

mi′cro-mere, mai′cro-mir or mic′ro-mir, n. Embryol. One of the smaller of the two kinds of cells resulting from the division of teleolecithal eggs. [< Gr. mikromerēs, < mikros, small, + meros, part.]

mi-crom′e-ter, mai-crom′e-tər or mic-rom′-, n. 1. An instrument for measuring very small angles or dimensions, generally used in connection with a microscope or telescope. There are a great variety of forms, but in nearly all the measurement is made by turning a very fine screw, which gives motion to a scale, spider-line, lens, prism, or ruled glass plate. 2. A micrometer-caliper or -gage. [< MICRO- + Gr. metron, measure.]

—annular, circular, or ring micrometer, an annular glass disk with a metal ring cemented on the inside to form a circular opening across which are placed parallel chords for measuring with great accuracy differences of declination of stars from the time that they occupy in passing from one chord to another.—dioptric m., a form of double-image micrometer in which the divided lens is in the eye-tube.—divided-object-glass or double-image m., a micrometer in which two images are formed in the field by the halves of a bisected lens movable along the line of their segmentation. One form of this micrometer is the heliometer.—mi-crom′e-ter-bal″ance, n. A delicate coin-balance brought to equilibrium by a micrometer-screw.—m.-caliper, m.-gage, n. A caliper or gage having a micrometer-screw.—m.-screw, n. A screw with fine and very accurately cut threads, and a circular, graduated head, which shows the amount of advancement or retraction of the screw: used in fine measurements.—reticulated m., a micrometer consisting of a low-power telescope eyepiece, having stretched across it two series of equidistant parallel wires at right angles with each other.

A Micrometer-caliper.
l, adjustable leg, made to turn; m, movable leg, operated by an interior micrometer-screw; v, vernier.

mi″cro-met′ric, mai′cro-met′ric or mic′ro-, a. Relating to or made by the micrometer; of the nature of minute measurement. mi″cro-met′ric-al‡.

> He (Rutherfurd) speedily obtained many sharply defined maps of star groups upon glass, and it remained only to effect the intended measurements upon these maps. . . . No known micrometric apparatus was adapted . . . to effect these measurements. F. A. P. BARNARD in Harper's Monthly Dec., '75, p. 88.

mi-crom′e-try, mai-crem′e-tri or mic-rem′-, n. The art of using the micrometer; the measurement of very minute lengths and angles.

mi″cro-mil′li-me″ter, etc. See MICRO-.

mi′cron, mai′cron, C., or mic′ron, W. (XIII), n. One-millionth of a meter, or one-thousandth of a millimeter: represented by the symbol μ. The combination μμ represents one-thousandth of a micron. [< Gr. mikron, neut. s. of mikros, small.]

Mi″cro-ne′si-an, mai′cro-[or mic′ro-]ni′si-ən, C. (-shən, W.), a. Of or peculiar to Micronesia, the groups of Pacific islands north of Melanesia, or to its inhabitants or language. Mi″kro-ne′si-an‡.

Mi″cro-ne′si-an, n. 1. One of the natives of Micronesia, of mixed Polynesian and Malayan blood, with slight infusion of Tagala, Japanese, Chinese, and perhaps Papuan and Negrito elements. 2. The dialects of Micronesia, belonging to the Polynesian branch of the Malayo-Polynesian languages. Compare MALAYO-POLYNESIAN.

mi′cro-phone, mai′cro-fōn or mic′ro-, n. Elec. An apparatus for magnifying faint sounds by the variation in electrical resistance caused by variation of pressure at a loose contact. In most forms a piece of carbon touching another piece loosely is included in a telephone circuit. When the loose carbon is jarred by the sound to be magnified, there is a rapid variation of pressure, and therefore of current, producing a similar but louder sound in the telephone. The ordinary carbon telephone transmitter depends on this principle.

[< MICRO- + Gr. phōnē, sound.]

—mi″cro-phon′ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or produced by a microphone. mi-croph′o-nous‡.—mi″cro-phon′ics, n. The branch of acoustics that treats of the augmenting of weak sounds.—mi′cro-pho″ny, n. Weakness of voice.

Mi-crop′o-da, mai-crep′o-də, n. pl. Conch. A division of monomyarian bivalves with the foot aborted, as the oysters. [< MICRO- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.]

Mi″cro-pod′i-dæ, mai′[or mī′]cro-ped′i-dē or -dē, n. pl. Ornith. A family of picarian birds; swifts. Mi′cro-pus, n. (t. g.) [< MICRO- + Gr. pous, foot.]

—mi″cro-pod′id, n.—mi-crop′o-doid, n.

Mi″cro-po-di′næ, mai′[or mī′]cro-po-dai′nē or -dī′nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of Micropodidæ; true swifts. [< MICROPUS.]—mi-crop′o-din(e), a. & n.

Mi″cro-po-dol′de-æ, mai′[or mī′]cro-po-del′de-ī or -ē, n. pl. Ornith. A superfamily of picarians, including Micropodidæ and Trochilidæ or Micropodidæ alone. [< MICROPUS + -OID.]

—mi″cro-po-dol′de-an, a. & n.

mi-crop′o-dal‡.

mi′cro-pus, mi′cro-rhabd, etc. See MICR-.

mi′cro-scope, mai′cro-scōp, C. E. I. S. W.[1] Wr., or mic′ro-, W.[2], n. 1. An instrument for assisting the eye in the vision of minute objects or features of objects that would be invisible without such aid.

In the simple microscope a single convex lens, between the eye and the object, forms an enlarged virtual image. In the compound microscope an object-glass or objective, near the object, forms a real image, which is viewed by the observer through a magnifying eyepiece. Either objective or eyepiece, or both, may be composed of more than one lens.

The Microscope.

2. [M-] The constellation Microscopium. See CONSTELLATION. [< MICRO- + -SCOPE.]

—binocular microscope, a microscope having one object-glass and a double eyepiece to permit both eyes to be used at once in observation, the rays being divided by a prism.—chemical m., an inverted microscope.—filar m., one having cross-wires or -threads in the focus of its eyepiece.—inverted m., one whose object-glass is below the stage, the rays being reflected to the eyepiece by an inverted prism: used to avoid acid fumes from the object viewed.—lucernal m., one in which the object is illuminated by a lamp.—m.-lamp, n. A form of bull's-eye lantern.—monocular m., one with but a single eyepiece.—oxyhydrogen m., one in which the object is illuminated by an oxyhydrogen light: usually for projection.—solar m., one in which the concentrated rays of the sun are used to illuminate the object: usually for projection on a screen.

mi″cro-scop′ic, mai″cro-scep′ic or mic″ro-, a. 1. Pertaining to the microscope or to microscopy; partaking of the characteristics, or performing the functions, of the microscope; adapted to or characterized by minute observation; as, a microscopic lens; a microscopic eye; a microscopic investigator.

His eye is both microscopic and telescopic; conversant at once with the animalcule of society and letters, and the larger objects of human concern. E. P. WHIPPLE Essays and Reviews, Macaulay in vol. i, p. 14. [o. & co. '71.]

2. Made, or as if made, with the microscope; as, microscopic analysis; microscopic criticism. 3. Visible only under the microscope; exceedingly minute; as, microscopic parasites. mi-cros′co-pal‡; mi″cro-sco′pi-al or -scop′ic-al‡.

Synonyms: see LITTLE.

—mi″cro-scop′ic-al-ly, adv. By means of or as if with the microscope; so as to require a microscope.

mi′cro-sco″pist, mai′cro-scō″pist or mi-cres′co-pist (XIII), n. One expert in the use of the microscope.

mi′cro-sco″py, mai′cro-scō″pi, C., or mi-cres′co-pi, W., n. The art of examining objects with the microscope; microscopic investigation.

mi″cro-sec′tion, etc. See MICRO-.

mic′tion, mic′shun, n. The act of urinating. [< LL. mictio(n-), < L. mictus, pp. of mingo, urinate.]

—mic′tu-rate, vi. To void urine; urinate.—mic″tu-ri′tion, n. The act of urinating, especially in small quantities and frequently. mine-tu′ri-en-cy†.

mid, mid, a. Middle: sometimes treated as an adjective, but properly always part of a compound word, representing the noun middle or midst; as, suspended in mid air (properly mid-air—the middle or midst of the air). [< AS. mid; cp. L. medius, middle.]

midde†.

—mid′age″, n. 1. The middle period of life; middle-life. 2. People of middle age, collectively.—mid-angle, n. The half of a right angle; 45 degrees.—mid′bod″y, n. The mesosoma.—mid′brain″, n. The mesencephalon.—mid-channel, n. The middle of the channel.—mid-course, n. 1. The middle of a course. 2. A middle course of procedure.—mid-earth. I. a. Inland. II. n. The center of the earth.—mid′feath″er, n. 1. A horizontal water-bridge back of a boiler-furnace, having a flame-passage above and one below it. 2. In mining, a support to the center of a tunnel.—mid-galley, n. The middle of a ship.—mid-gear, n. That position of the valve-motion of a steam-engine in which the engine will run neither way.—mid′gut″, n. The primitive intestinal cavity, formed by the closure of the body-walls of the embryo.—mid-heaven, n. 1. The middle of heaven or of the heavens. 2. Astron. The meridian of a place.—mid-hour, n. 1. Midday. 2. An hour between two other hours.—mid′lay″er, n. The mesoderm.—mid′leg″, n. The middle of the leg.—mid-Lent, n. The middle of Lent.—mid′lent″ing, a. Same as MOTHERING.—mid′life″, n. Same as MID-AGE, 1.—mid′main″, n. [Poet.] The middle of the main or sea.—mid-morn, n. [Prov. Eng.] Nine o'clock in the morning. H. Dict. mid-morrow‡.—mid-noon, n. The middle of the day.—mid-off, n. The left-hand midwicket in cricket.—mid-on, n. The right-hand midwicket in cricket.—mid-parent, n. A hypothetical parent having a stature midway between that of the father and the mother.—mid-parentage, n.—mid′rib″, n. Bot. The central or main rib of a leaf.—mid′ribbed″, a.—mid-sea, n. The open sea.—mid′stream″, n. The middle of the stream.—mid-stroke, n. Mech. The middle of a stroke or travel of a piston or slide-valve.—mid-styled, a. Bot. Having the style of intermediate length as compared with those of the long-styled and short-styled flowers: applied to heterogonous trimorphic flowers, as those of spiked loosestrife (Lythrum Salicaria).—mid″ter-ra′ne-an†, a. Mediterranean.—mid′vein″, n. Bot. Same as MIDRIB.—mid-watch, n. Naut. The watch aboard ship from midnight to four A. M., or the part of the crew which stands that watch.—mid-week. I. a. In the middle of the week. II. n. The middle of the week.—mid′wick″et, n. In cricket, one of the fielders who stand nearly abreast of the bowler's wicket, but somewhat to the left and right; also, the ground occupied by him. Called respectively midwicket-off and midwicket-on, or mid-off and mid-on.

mid, prep. 1. [Poet.] Amid; among. 2†. With.

mi′da, mai′da or mī′da, n. The maggot of the bean-fly. [< Gr. midas, a kind of insect.]

mi′dan, mai′dăn. C., n. 1. A grassy plain near a town; also, an open space or plaza in a town. 2. In Arabia, a race-course. [Hind., < Per. maidān.] mi′daun‡.

Mi′das, mai′dos, n. 1. A fabulously rich man: from Midas, a king of Phrygia, fabled to have turned into gold everything he touched. 2. (1) Mam. A genus typical of Midiidæ. (2) [m-] A marmoset of this genus. [< Gr. Midas; see def. 1.]

—Mi′das′s-ear′, n. An ear-shell (Auricula midæ).

mid′day″, mid′dē′. I. a. Pertaining to noon or the middle of the day; as, a midday siesta. II. n. The middle of the day: noon.—mid′day″-flow″er, n. [Australian.] Any species of Mesembryanthemum. mid′den, mid′n, n. 1. Same as KITCHEN-MIDDEN. 2. [Prov. Eng.] A dunghill, or heap of refuse. [< Dan. mödding, møgdynge, < møg, muck, + dynge, heap.] mid′-den-hill″†; mid′din†; mid′dling†.

—mid′den-crow″, n. [Local, Eng.] The common crow.—mid′den-stead, n. A dunghill spot or place.

mid′dest†, a. Middlemost: superlative of MID, a.

mid′dest†, n. The midst or middle.

mid′dle, mid′l, vt. [MID′DLED; MID′DLING.] 1. To place in the middle. 2. To fold or double in the middle, as a rope or piece of cloth.

mid′dle, a. 1. Occupying a position equally distant from the extremes; mean; as, the middle point.

The Aztec had plainly reached that middle station, as far above the rude races of the New World as it was below the cultivated communities of the Old.

PRESCOTT Mexico vol. ii, bk. iv, ch. 2, p. 139. [H. '51.]

2. Occupying any intermediate position; intervening.

Woman must be a subject or an equal; there is no middle ground. HIGGINSON Atlantic Essays essay v, p. 96. [o. & co. '71.]

3. Gram. (1) See MIDDLE VOICE, under VOICE. (2) Between rough or aspirated and smooth or unaspirated; as, a middle mute. See MEDIAL. [< AS. middel, middle, < mid, mid.] mid′del†.

—mid′dle-aged″, a. Being between youth and old age; from about thirty-five to fifty or fifty-five years old; as, a middle-aged man.—m. C, the note standing on the first leger line above the bass staff and the first leger line below the treble staff, or the corresponding tone or key.—m. class, a. Of or pertaining to the middle class.—m. class, the class that occupies an intermediate position socially; the trading class; bourgeoisie.—m. distance or ground, that part of a picture which lies between the background and the foreground.—m. earth [Poet.], the earth considered as midway between heaven and hell.—M. Kingdom, the Chinese empire.

Chung Kwo, 'The Middle State,' or kingdom, grew up in the feudal period as a name for the royal domain in the midst of the other states, or for those states as a whole in the midst of the uncivilised states around them. The idea of its being 'in the middle of the earth' did not enter into the designation.

mil'i-tan-cy, mil'i-tan-si, n. The condition of being militant; specifically, that social condition of mankind in which the efforts of men are directed chiefly to armed conflict with one another: opposed to industrialism.

There is another root in the primitive and still-surviving militancy. SPENCER Data of Ethics ch. 6, p. 96. [A. '79.]

mil'i-tant, mil'i-tant, a. 1. Engaged in or pertaining to fighting or conflict with opposing powers or influences; combating; as, the church militant (see CHURCH). 2. Of a warlike or combative disposition or tendency.

We think the councils held in heaven
Sit long, ere yet that blissful leaven
Work peace amongst the militant.
JEAN INGELOW Scholar and Carpenter st. 17.

mil'i-ta-ri-ly, mil'i-tę-ri-li, adv. In a military manner; by force of arms.

mil'i-ta-rism, mil'i-tą-rizm, n. The giving of undue prominence to military training and military glory; the maintenance of government by military force; warlike or military spirit: used now mostly in reference to the European policy of maintaining great standing armies.

Although militarism is an influence as subtle as it is powerful, yet its absolute hold upon a nation is necessarily relaxed in the degree of the national enlightenment.
Harper's Weekly July 18, '91, p. 530, col. 2.

mil'i-ta-rist, mil'i-tą-rist, n. 1. One who believes in or advocates militarism. 2. One devoted to a military life or to military affairs.

mil'i-ta-ry, mil'i-tę-ri, a. 1. Of or pertaining to soldiers, arms, or warfare; becoming a soldier; conformable to the rules of warfare; soldierly; warlike; martial; as, a military bearing; military discipline or renown.

New England was regarded as the most military among the British colonies. F. PARKMAN Montcalm and Wolfe vol. i, ch. 1, p. 28. [L. B. & CO. '84.]

2. Having arms as a profession; being a soldier; as, a military man. 3. Done, supported, or carried on by force of arms; as, a military expedition or despotism. [< L. militaris, < miles (milit-), soldier.] mil'i-tar†.

—military feud, a feudal estate (in England) held in a tenure of military service.—m. orders, orders of medieval soldier-monks. See KNIGHT.—m. railway, a railway for military service; specifically, one with armor-plated motors and cars, the latter having port-holes for guns.

mil'i-ta-ry, n. A body of soldiers or the whole of the soldiers of a state or nation; soldiery; army: usually with the definite article; as, the military is on the way.

Synonyms: see ARMY.

mil'i-tate, mil'i-tēt, vi. [-TA'TED; -TA'TING.] 1. To have weight or influence (in determining a question): followed by against or with, or more rarely for or in favor of; as, this evidence militates against your hypothesis.

To many minds the idea of Evolution, . . . so far from militating against the belief in a Creator, is entirely in favor of that belief. A. MASON Faith of the Gospel ch. 1, p. 13. [E. P. D. '90.]

2. [Archaic.] To contend with or as with arms; fight. [< L. militatus, pp. of milito; see MILITANT.]

mil"i-ta'tion, mil'i-tē'shun, n. The act of militating; a belligerent or martial condition; warfare.

mi-li'tia, mi-lish'ą, n. 1. Those citizens, collectively, who are enrolled and drilled in military organizations other than the permanent military forces, as, in the United States, the National Guard of the various States. 2. [U. S.] The whole body of citizens capable of bearing arms who may be called on for military duty. 3†. Soldiery; the military. 4†. Warfare. [< F. milice, < L. militia, < miles (milit-), soldier.] mil"ice'†.

—mi-li'tia-man, n. A member of the militia.

mi-li'ti-ate†, vi. To raise or maintain an army; carry on war.

milk, milk, v. I. t. 1. (1) To draw milk from; as, to milk cows. (2) To draw (milk) from the udder; as, to milk a pailful of milk. 2. [Colloq. or Slang.] To drain or exhaust; hence, to abstract or take from, as surreptitiously.

For . . . purposes of mere æsthetic nourishment Goethe always milked other minds—if minds those ruminators and digesters of antiquity into asses' milk may be called. LOWELL Among my Books, Shakespeare Once More in first series, p. 188. [o. & co. '70.]

3. Specifically: (1) Elec. To draw off a part of the current from; tap without cutting; read a message from by induction of the current: said of a telegraph-wire or -circuit. (2) [Slang.] Horse-racing. (a) To obtain money from (a person) by any questionable or fraudulent turf transaction. (b) To withdraw (a horse) from a race for a bribe.

They first 'milked' him, that is, obtained money by his not running. Contemporary Review June, '73, p. 21.

(c) To lay wagers against (one's own horse). 4†. To give milk to. 5†. To suck.

II. i. To yield milk; as, the cow milks easily. [< AS. meolcian, < meolc, milk.] milke†.—to milk the street Slang, U. S.), to make a profit out of smaller traders by alternately supporting and depressing the market: said on the stock or other exchanges of large traders.

milk, n. 1. The opaque whitish liquid secreted by the mammary glands of female mammals for the nourishment of their young. Milk is an emulsion with a slight but pleasant odor, an agreeable sweetish taste, and a specific gravity of from 1.018 to 1.045. It consists of from 80 to 90 per cent. of water, in which are dissolved from 2 to 6 per cent. casein, 1.5 to 9 per cent. milk-sugar, 0.1 to 2 per cent. mineral salts, and 2.5 to 6 per cent. of globules of fat (butter) in suspension. When allowed to rest, the globules gradually rise toward the surface and form cream. By strongly agitating milk, as in churning, the external envelope of the fat-globules is broken and the butter collects together in a pasty mass. The milk secreted by the mother during the first three or four days after birth is a turbid yellowish fluid with strong alkaline reaction and possessing purgative qualities, and is called colostrum. When milk is coagulated, as by rennet or other agents, the casein separates into curds, which when prepared form cheese; hence, for the making of this article a milk rich in casein is preferred.

The constituents of different kinds of milk are exhibited in the following table, derived from one compiled by Dr. Charles A. Doremus:

Varieties.	Water.	Solids.	Fat.	Casein.	Albumen.	Milk-sugar.	Ash.	Nitrogenized.	Non-nitrogenized.

* Milk-sugar included.

2. Something that resembles milk. (1) The sap or juice of certain plants, such as the juice of the coconut, the sap of the fig-tree, etc.

The cow-plant of Ceylon, . . . Gymnema lactiferum, yields a milk of which the Cingalese make use for food.
LINDLEY Vegetable Kingdom class vii, p. 635. [A. '53.]

(2) Pharm. One of various emulsions, liquids containing precipitates in suspension, etc. See phrases. (3) [U. S.] The semi-fluid ripe ova of an oyster. 3. A whitish opalescent appearance characterizing some diamonds. 4. [Slang.] Money made on the turf by any questionable or fraudulent transaction.

Ferret gets another horse or two of which he has the control entered at his own weights, so that he may . . . have . . . a chance of some milk. Contemporary Review June, '73, p. 27.

[< AS. meolc, milk.]

Compounds, etc.:—blue milk. 1. Watered milk. 2. Milk that turns blue, owing to the growth of a chromogenic bacterium (Bacterium cyanogenum). 3. [Colloq.] Skimmed milk.—Bristol m., a beverage made of sherry and other ingredients.—condensed m., milk concentrated to the consistency of thick cream or sometimes to a dry condition, and sometimes preserved by the addition of sugar.—fairy's m., a secretion from the mammary glands of an infant, occurring for a few days after birth. Called also witch's milk.—in the m., milky, as the oyster when it contains the young, or as a wheat-kernel when it contains a white secretion before it begins to harden.—milk'ab"scess, n. Broken breast; mammary abscess.—m.-and-water, a. [Colloq.] Weak and vacillating; namby-pamby: as, a milk-and-water political policy.—m.-blotch, n. The milky scall or tetter. m.-crust‡.—m.-bowie, n. [Scot.] A milk-pail.—m.-cooler, n. An apparatus for cooling milk.—m.-cure, n. The treatment of disease by subsisting on a diet of milk alone.—m.-dame†, n. A foster-mother or wet-nurse.—m.-dentition, n. Deciduous dentition. See DENTITION.—m.-duct, n. One of the passages of the mammary gland by which milk is discharged.—m.-factory, n. 1. A place where butter and cheese are made. 2. A condensed-milk factory. 3. In Ireland, a place where the cream is extracted from milk, the skimmed article being returned to the farmers.—m.-fever, n. The fever that generally attends the secretion of milk about the third day after delivery in childbirth.—milk'fish", n. A chanceoid fish (Chanos salmoneus) of the Pacific, highly esteemed as food.—m.-globule, n. One of the fatty globules, consisting of butter and casein, that give to milk its white appearance, since they reflect the light.—m.-kinship, n. That degree of relationship existing between foster-children.—m.-knot, n. A small hard lump sometimes occurring in the breast after slight inflammation or after the milk-forming period.—m.-kye, n. pl. [Scot.] Milch cows.—m.-leg, n. The white swelling of parturient women; "white-leg" (phlegmasia dolens).—m.-livered, a. Cowardly; timorous; white-livered.—milk'maid", n. A woman who milks cows; dairymaid. m.-madge‡.—milk'man, n. One who sells milk from door to door; a milk-peddler.—m.-meat, n. Any food made chiefly of milk.—m.-mirror, n. A mark on the udder of a cow, caused by the hair growing in a direction opposite to the regular or natural one, and supposed to indicate the quality of the animal as a milker.—m.-mite, n. The cheese-mite.—m.-molar, n. One of the molars of the temporary or deciduous set replaced by a premolar.—m.-nurse, n. A wet-nurse.—m. of almonds, see ALMOND.—m. of lime, slaked lime in water.—m. of sulfur, precipitated sulfur.—m.-pan, n. A shallow pan in which milk is kept standing while the cream is rising.—m.-pap, n. [Rare.] A teat.—m.-parsley, n. An Old World herb (Peucedanum palustre) of the parsley family (Umbelliferæ), with a milky juice.—m.-pea, n. Any one of various prostrate or twining perennial herbs of the genus Galactia, of the bean family (Leguminosæ), with racemes of purplish flowers, found in the eastern United States.—m.-plasma, n. A clear slightly opalescent fluid obtained by filtering milk through clay filters or membranes. [C.]—m.-porridge, n. Porridge made with milk instead of water.—m.-pump, n. A breast-pump.—m.-quartz, n. Milk-white quartz.—m.-ranch, n. [Western U. S.] A dairy.—m.-scab, n. Milk-blotch.—m. shake [U. S.], an iced drink made of sweetened and flavored milk, carbonated water, and sometimes raw egg, mixed by being violently shaken by a machine specially invented for the purpose.—m.-sick, a. [Colloq.] Affected with milk-sickness.—m.-sickness, n. A kind of malignant fever affecting both man and beast. Called also swamp-sickness, the trembles.

The milk-sickness is a mysterious disease which . . . seems to have been a malignant form of fever—attributed . . . to the eating of poisonous herbs by the cattle, . . . attended with violent retching and a burning sensation in the stomach, often terminating fatally on the third day. NICOLAY AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. i, ch. 2, p. 30. [c. co. '90.]

—m.-snake, n. A colubrine serpent (Ophibolus doliatus, var. triangulus), grayish with three series of brown blotches, and about 3 feet long: often seen about dairies in the northern United States.—m.-spot, n. An opalescent patch of variable size usually found in the front wall of the right ventricle of the adult heart.—milk'stone", n. A flint whitened by fire, found among prehistoric remains.—m.-sugar, n. The sugar contained in milk; lactose. Called also sugar of milk.—m.-tester, n. A device for testing milk, as a lactometer.—m.-thistle, n. 1. A thistle-like European herb (Silybum Marianum or Carduus Marianus) of the aster family (Compositæ), with white-spotted leaves, formerly cultivated for culinary use. Called also blessed, holy, or our Lady's thistle. 2. The sow-thistle.—m.-thrush, n. Aphthous sore mouth of infants; white thrush.—m.-tie, n. Milk-kinship.—m.-tooth, n. A tooth of the milk-dentition.—m.-train, n. 1. [U. S.] A railway-train made up especially for the transportation of milk to the large cities. 2. [Canada.] An itinerant milk-wagon collecting milk for the use of cheese-factories or creameries.—m.-tree, n. Either of two South-American cow-trees, the Brosimum Galactodendron and Tabernæmontana utilis.—m.-vat, n. A vat used in cheese-making for coagulating milk.—m.-fat.—m.-vessel, n. Bot. A tube containing or secreting the milky fluids of a plant.—m.-vetch, n. Any one of various herbs of the genus Astragalus: so called in the Old World from the supposed increase in the secretion of milk by goats feeding upon them.—m.-walk, n. A milkman's district or route.—m.-warm, a. Warm as new milk; tepid.—m.-white, a. Of a milky whiteness.—m.-woman, n. [Scot.] A wet-nurse.—pigeons' m., a substance like thick milk in the crop of pigeons, with which they feed their young by disgorging it.—whole m., unskimmed milk.

The following compounds have also been used: m.-bottle, m.-can, m.-car, m.-house, m.-pail, m.-route, m.-wagon.

milk'en†, a. 1. Like milk; milky. 2. Consisting of milk.—milk'en-way"†, n. The Milky Way.

milk'er, milk'ėr, n. 1. One who or that which milks; specifically, a mechanical device for milking cows. 2. A domestic animal, especially a cow, that is milked or gives milk (as in some specified way); as, a hard milker.

milk'ful, milk'ful, a. Full of milk; hence, fertile.

milk'ing, milk'ing, n. 1. The act of one who milks, in any sense. 2. The amount of milk taken at one time of milking.—milk'ing-stool", n. A stool on which the milker sits while milking.—m.-time, n. The time for milking animals, especially about sunset.—m.-tube, n. A tube inserted in a cow's teat to permit the milk to flow without the necessity of pressing the udder.

milk'less, milk'les, a. Having no milk.

milk'sop", milk'sop', n. 1. An effeminate or milk-and-water man: a term of contempt.

Boys will be boys, and I don't want Harry to be the first milk-sop in his family. THACKERAY Virginians ch. 28, p. 126. [H. '77.]

2. [Rare.] A bit of bread soaked in milk.

—milk'sop"ism, n. [Rare.] Effeminacy.

milk'weed", milk'wēd', n. Any plant of the genus Asclepias, of the milkweed family (Asclepiadaceæ): so called from the milky juice. Each of the numerous flat, margined seeds is clothed with a tuft of long silky hairs, giving rise to the additional name of silk-weed. Other plants of entirely different families from the milkweed family, but having a milky juice, are sometimes called milkweed, as the sow-thistle, of the aster family (Compositæ), and some of the spurges.

The Purple Milkweed (Asclepias purpurascens).
a, a hood of corona, showing the sickle-shaped horn; b, a pod.

—green milkweed, any plant of the genus Acerates, closely allied to Asclepias, and having greenish flowers.—m.-butterfly, n. The monarch (Danais plexippus).

milk'wort", milk'wŭrt', n. 1. Any plant of the genus Polygala, of the milkwort family (Polygalaceæ): so called long ago from the fancied property of increasing the secretion of milk in animals. In the United States the name is a book-name mainly, known to botanists chiefly as the approximate rendering of the botanical name Polygala (much milk). In Europe the species P. vulgaris, not found in the United States, is popularly so named. It is called also rogation-flower and procession-flower, from its time of blooming and its use. 2. Any plant of the milkwort family; in the plural, the milkwort family.

milk'y, milk'i, a. [MILK'I-ER; MILK'I-EST.] 1. Made of, containing, or like milk; as, milky sap. 2. Yielding milk; as, "the milky mothers of the herd."

The milkiest cow, the squarest shouldered ox.
WILL CARLETON Festival of Industry st. 1.

3. As mild as milk; spiritless; timorous. 4. Containing young or spawn; as, milky oysters. milch'y‡.—Milky Way (Astron.), the Galaxy. See NEBULA.

The countless millions of stars composing the Milky Way appear to be arranged in the form of a flat zone or ring, or rather stratum, of irregular shape. O. M. MITCHEL Planetary and Stellar Worlds lect. ix, p. 280. [s. '56.]

mill, mil, v. I. t. 1. To grind in a mill. 2. To subject to any of the mechanical processes performed by a mill of any kind. 3. Metal-working. (1) To bring up the edge of (a coin) so as to make it thicker than the part within, thus protecting the design on the face of the coin from wear.

The surface [of coins] needs to bear some variety of impression, so that if the metal is filed or worn away, it may be apparent; the same purpose is subserved by milling the edges. WAYLAND AND CHAPIN Political Economy ch. 20, p. 302. [SH. & CO. '84.]

(2) To produce a rough edge on, as a knob. (3) To form or slot, in a milling-machine. 4. To treat, as leather, by a mechanical process for saturating with oil and tanning-liquid. 5. To felt or full, as cloth. 6. To throw, as undyed silk. 7. To froth (chocolate) as by churning.

What Pericles would not do to save a friend's life [take an equivocal oath], you may be assured, I would not hazard merely to mill the chocolate-pot of a drunken fool's vanity till it frothed over. COLERIDGE Works, Biog. Lit. in vol. iii, p. 512. [H. '53.]

8. [Slang.] To strike severely with the fists.

II. i. 1. To dive and swim under water: said of whales. 2. [U. S.] To move slowly in a circle when headed off and stopped during a stampede: said of herded cattle.

mill¹, n. 1. A machine by means of which grain is ground for food. Originally, grain was ground by placing it between two flat stones and rubbing one roughly over the other by hand. This fundamental idea of an upper and a nether stone was contained in all mills and devices for grinding grain until recently machines or mills for grinding grain by passing it through rollers were invented. 2. Any one of various kinds of machines that transform raw material by other processes than grinding into some other form; as, a saw-mill; planing-mill. 3. A machine that acts by rotary motion, as a lapidaries' wheel. 4. A machine for reducing to small or smaller proportions hard substances of any kind: generally compounded with the word denoting the thing to be ground; as, quartz-mill. 5. Metal. (1) An establishment for reducing ores by a process other than smelting. (2) An ironworks where the metal in the cruder forms is converted into merchant iron. 6. A building fitted up with the machinery requisite for a factory; as, a cotton-mill; woolen-mill. 7. Calico & Bank-note Print. A hardened steel roller, bearing a design in relief, by which a printing-plate or a die may be made by pressure. 8. Mining. An opening through the attle to permit ore to be discharged from the stopes of a mine to the cars or barrows; a pass. 9. A screw-press used for coining in the time of Queen Elizabeth. 10. [Slang.] A pugilistic combat; set-to.

And a champion was picked out on each side tacitly, who settled the matter by a good hearty mill. T. HUGHES Tom Brown at Rugby pt. ii, ch. 5, p. 303. [o. & co. '71.]

11. [Colloq.] A treadmill. 12. [Scot.] A snuff-box. [< AS. myln, < LL. molina, < L. molo, grind.] mille†. See MIL.

Phrases, etc.:—army mill, a portable grinding-mill supported on a tripod, and arranged with a crank to be driven by two men.—Barker's m. (Hydraul.), a mill invented by Dr. Barker (17th century), operating by the reaction of water-jets escaping tangentially from hollow horizontal radial arms, causing rotation of the vertical axle from which they project.—cannon-ball m., a mill for grinding tough materials by attrition with cannon-balls in a rotating drum or chamber.—Chilean m., a grinding- or crushing-machine in which two heavy wheels revolve about a central vertical axis, in a circular trough, while rolling upon the material to be crushed. See ARRASTRE.—eccentric m., a grinding-mill in which the centers of the plates are not opposite.—Hungarian m., a rotating mill used in Hungary for removing small portions of gold from quartz by mixing with mercury: one of the many forms of pan-amalgamators. See AMALGAMATION.—mill'-bar", n. Rough bar iron, as distinguished from merchant bar.—mill'board", n. Heavy pasteboard used by bookbinders for the covers of books.—m.-bush, n. The iron lining in the eye of a millstone.—m.-cake, n. 1. The by-product left after the oil has been extracted from linseed. 2. The cake formed by mixing and pressing together the materials of gunpowder previous to granulation.—m.-cinder, n. Slag produced in the puddling process.—m.-driver, n. A millstone-driver. See MILLSTONE.—m.-eye, n. An opening in the case of a millstone to permit discharge of the meal or other product.—m.-feeder, n. A horizontal projection from the spindle of a horizontal millstone to cause feed of the material by shaking the hopper-spout.—m.-file, n. A single-cut flat file used for filing mill-saws, and incidentally for lathe-work and drawfiling.—m.-furnace, n. An iron-furnace for reheating iron that is to be rerolled or welded under the hammer.—m.-gang, n. 1. That part of a loom-warp made by a rising and falling course of the threads around old-style warping-mills. 2. A gang of lumber-saws.—m.-gearing, n. Wheelwork: a collective term.—m.-hand, n. A worker in a mill or factory.—m.-head, n. A head of water for turning a mill-wheel.—m.-horse, n. A horse that turns a mill. m.-jade‡.—mill'man, n. A man employed in a mill or factory.—m.-money, n. 1. Milled money. 2. [Local, U. S.] Paper promises to pay, in goods or in money, issued by owners of factories to employees; shinplasters.—m.-mountain, n. A bitter purgative, European flaxwort (Linum catharticum).—m.-pick, n. A millstone-pick.—m.-ream, n. A ream of hand-made paper of which the two outer quires are imperfect.—m.-rolls, n. pl. The rolls through which puddled iron is run previous to being marketed.—m.-round, n. A monotonous round of work like that of the mill-horse; dull routine of duty.—m.-rynd, n. The rynd of a millstone. See RYND. m.-rind†; m.-rine†.—m.-saw, n. A gate-saw.—m.-scale, n. The scale of ferric oxid that peels from iron during rolling. Compare FORGE-SCALE.—m.-sixpence, n. A milled six-penny piece.—m.-skate, n. Eng.] The eagle-ray.—m.-spindle, n. The vertical axis of a horizontal grinding-mill.—m.-stank, n. A mill-pond; also, a mill-dam.—m.-tail, n. Same as TAIL-RACE.—m.-tooth, n. A molar.—m.-ward, n. One who keeps a mill.—m.-wheel, n. The water-wheel that drives a mill.—m.-work, n. Mech. 1. Mill or factory machinery. 2. The planning, building, arranging, and setting up of mill or factory machinery.—m.-yard, n. The yard of a mill; specifically, the yard or space surrounding a lumber-mill in which the cut or sawed lumber and shingles are piled.—to go through the m., to acquire a complete experience of a thing.

mill[2], mil, n. A thousandth part; in the United States monetary system, the tenth part of a cent (or thousandth of a dollar). [< L. mille, thousand.]

mill'-dam", mil'-dam', n. 1. A barrier thrown across a watercourse to raise its level or extend its area: usually to supply water under head as for a mill-wheel. 2. The pond or sheet of water formed by such a barrier.

mil"le-fi-o'ri, mil"le-fi-ō'ri, n. pl. [It.] Art. An old Venetian mosaic glass: literally, "a thousand flowers." Called also millefiori glass or millefiore glass. See GLASS.

mind, maind, v. I. t. 1. To fasten one's mind or thoughts upon; occupy oneself with; pay attention to; as, to mind the signs of the times. 2. To regard with care or concern or as objectionable; care for; as, I do not mind the noise. 3. To fulfil the commands of; yield submissively to; obey; as, that boy minds his mother. 4. To have charge of; see after; tend; watch; as, to mind the sheep.

Though I says it as shouldn't, I'm a handy lad. . . . Oh, Sir, I do beg and pray you let me mind your pigeons. JULIANA H. EWING Daddy Darwin's Dovecot sc. 4, p. 24. [E. & J. Y.]

5. [Colloq.] To be on guard against; be wary concerning; as, mind that suspicious-looking man. 6. In the Roman Catholic Church, to pray for. See A MONTH'S MIND, under MIND¹, n. 7. [Archaic.] To cause to recall something; remind; as, to mind one of human fallibility. 8. [Colloq.] To call to mind; remember.

And Dick you say is coming too. And Billy! ah: it's true
We buried him at Gettysburg. I mind the spot: do you!
BRET HARTE The Old Major Explains st. 6.

9†. To intend; plan.

II. i. 1. To pay attention; take notice; care; watch.

We bleed, and hate, and suffer, and are blind,
Uncomprehending; yet, if one will mind,
That Light is shining still on Life's far side.
EDWIN ARNOLD Light of the World p. 31. [F. & W. '91.]

2. To be obedient; as, the servant must learn to mind. 3. To have an inclination; purpose. 4. To recollect. [< AS. myndgian, < gemynd; see MIND¹, n.]
— mind your eye [Slang], take care! — never m., do not concern yourself with or about; pay no attention; no matter. — to m. one's p's and q's, to be accurate or precise: a phrase variously explained; perhaps an allusion to the supposed care in distinguishing the letters.

mind¹, n. 1. That which thinks, feels, and wills; the subject of conscious states; the entire psychical being of man: synonymous with soul or spirit. In this wide sense, mind embraces (1) intellect, (2) feeling, and (3) will.

Thinking is the very essence of mind, as extension is of matter. MARTINEAU Types of Ethical Theory vol. i, bk. i, branch ii, ch. 3, p. 168. [MACM. '86.]

2. Any mental state or activity. (1) Any state or act of the intellect; contemplation; thought; opinion; conclusion; as, he has the matter in mind; the man has changed his mind.

The Pope said there should be but one mind, and that should be his own. Luther said there should be as many minds as men. G. S. PHILLIPS Am. Republic in Prophecy ch. 6, p. 107. [POE & H.]

(2) The state or act of reknowing; memory; recollection; as, to bear in mind. (3) Any state or act of the feelings; inclination; desire; disposition or mental tendency; as, a man of strange mind.

Even the courtly principal deigned to inquire whether he found everything to his mind. HOLLAND Sevenoaks ch. 8, p. 102. [S. '75.]

(4) Any state or act of will; choice; decision; purpose; as, those of contrary mind; to make up one's mind. 3. The intellect or cognitive faculty, as distinguished from the feelings and will; the power of cognition or thought; as, in popular phrase, the human soul embraces mind, heart, and will. See INTELLECT.

The mind always works best when the heart is at ease.
D. P. BROWN The Forum vol. ii, ch. 1, p. 62. [R. H. S. '86.]

4. The renewed nature in man. Rom. vii, 23. 5. Animal mind: regarded by some as imperfectly corresponding with that of man, and by others as sensitiveness and sensation correlated with impulse and retentiveness, plus animal emotions and affections. See MAN.

6†. Spirit; courage. [< AS. gemynd, < munan, think.]

Synonyms: brain, disposition, intellect, intelligence, reason, soul, spirit, understanding. Mind, in a general sense, includes all the powers of sentient being apart from the physical factors in bodily faculties and activities; in a limited sense, mind is nearly synonymous with intellect, but includes disposition, or the tendency toward action, as appears in the phrase "to have a mind to work." As the seat of mental activity, brain (colloquially brains) is often used as a synonym for mind, intellect, intelligence. The soul includes the intellect, sensibilities, and will; beyond what is expressed by the word mind, the soul denotes especially the moral, the immortal nature; we say of a dead body, the soul (not the mind) has fled. Spirit is used especially in contradistinction from matter; it may in many cases be substituted for soul, but soul has always the fuller and more determinate meaning; we can conceive of spirits as having no moral nature; the fairies, elves, and brownies of mythology might be termed spirits, but not souls. In the figurative sense, spirit denotes animation, excitability, perhaps impatience; as, a lad of spirit; he sang with spirit; he replied with spirit. Soul denotes energy and depth of feeling, as when we speak of soulful eyes; or it may denote the very life of anything; as, "the hidden soul of harmony." MILTON L'Allegro l. 144. Compare synonyms for INTELLECT. — Antonyms: body, brute force, material, matter, sense, substance.

Phrases, etc.: — a month's mind. 1. R. C. Ch. The monthly anniversary, usually the first, of a person's death. Called also a monthly mind. 2†. Eager desire. — a year's m., a solemn anniversary service for the dead. — in or of two minds, subject to conflicting desires or motives; uncertain what to do. — mind'-day", n. The day on which a year's mind is celebrated. — m.-sick†, a. Having a deranged mind. — m.-stricken†, a. Impressed in mind; moved. — m.-stuff, n. A hypothetical substance or material that is supposed by division and differentiation to constitute mind. — m.-transference, n. The conveyance of thought by telepathy. — of one m., agreed. — of sound m., sane. — out of m., forgotten. — to be out of one's m., to be insane. — to have a m. or a great m., to feel disposed or powerfully disposed. — to have half a m., to feel slightly inclined: said flippantly. — to have in m., to have under consideration; recall. — to lose one's m., to become insane. — to make up one's m., to determine definitely, as after careful consideration and deliberation. — to put in m., to remind.

mind², mind, C., n. [Ir.] A diadem; one of certain lunettes found in Ireland, supposed to be Celtic head-ornaments.

mind'-cure", maind'-kiūr', n. An alleged method of healing based upon the assumption that all bodily diseases are due to abnormal conditions of mind, and can be cured by putting the sick person into a normal mental condition through the direct action of the mind of the healer upon the mind of the sick; mind-healing. Compare CHRISTIAN SCIENCE; FAITH-CURE.

—mind'-cur"er, m.-healer, n.

mind'ed, maind'ed, a. 1. Having an inclination or purpose; disposed; inclined; as, I was minded to do it.

'Thank you, dear Joseph,' said Amelia, quite ready to kiss her brother, if he were so minded.
THACKERAY Vanity Fair vol. i, ch. 4, p. 37. [L. '79.]

2. Having a (specified kind of) mind; used in composition; as, evil-minded; weak-minded.

I am charmed with the courteous behavior that so nobly marked the character of that generous-minded people. JONES in J. S. C. Abbott's Paul Jones ch. 10, p. 218. [D. M. & CO. '74.]

—mind'ed-ness, n. The state of being minded; disposition, inclination, or tendency: used in composition; as, worldly-mindedness; sober-mindedness.

mind'er, maind'er, n. 1. One who looks after, watches, or attends to anything.

In English factories, the boy that watches the loom, to tie the thread when the wheel stops to indicate that a thread is broken, is called a minder. EMERSON Society and Solitude, Farming p. 117. [H. M. & CO. '89.]

2. [Rare, Eng.] One who is cared for: a pauper child legally committed to the care of a private individual.

mind'ful, maind'ful, a. 1. Keeping in mind; regarding with thoughtful care; observant; heedful; as, mindful of the poor. 2. Having cognizance or knowledge (of); conscious; aware; as, not mindful of the danger.

Synonyms: see ATTENTIVE.

mind'ing, maind'ing, n. 1. Mindfulness; regard. 2. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] Recollection.—mind'ing-school", n. [Rare.] A school for minders. See MINDER, 2.

mind'less, maind'les, a. 1. Devoid of intelligence; unthinking; stupid; inanimate.

Then, in the loud world's bastard judgment-day,
One truth will damn me with the mindless mob.
TENNYSON Romney's Remorse st. 14.

2. Not giving heed or attention; unmindful; careless.

mind'-read"ing, maind'-rid'ing, n. The alleged ascertaining of the thought or purpose of some other mind, often at a distance, and independently of the ordinary channels of the senses: in the ordinary instances of contact usually explained by muscle-reading. Compare MUSCLE-READING; TELEPATHY. Called also thought-reading, thought-transference, mind-transference.

—mind'-read"er, n. One who professes and practises mind-reading.

mine, main, v. [MINED; MI'NING.] I. t. 1. To obtain by digging out of the earth: also, to make diggings into for ore or the like; as, coal is mined; they mined rich veins of silver.

Iron ore is to-day mined in twenty-three of our states.
STRONG Our Country ch. 2, p. 25. [S. & T. CO. '90.]

2. To dig into for destructive purposes; undermine; sap: said especially of tunneling to place explosives, as in war or for blasting reefs of rock; figuratively, to ruin by slow or secret means.

The swifter current that mines its root.
BRYANT Green River st. 2.

3. To make by digging in the earth; dig; burrow; as, the captives mined a passage for escape.

II. i. 1. To dig a mine for obtaining ore, coal, etc.; dig a military mine; engage in mining. 2. To make a hole or passage by digging in the earth; burrow. 3. Figuratively, to work stealthily or insidiously. [< F. miner, < LL. mino, open a mine, drive, < L. minor; see MINATORY.]

mine, n. 1. Mining. (1) An excavation, properly underground, for digging out some useful product, as ore, metal, or coal. (2) Any deposit of such material suitable for excavation and working; as, a placer mine.

How often men have lived and died poor just above mines of untold wealth! E. P. ROE Opening of a Chestnut Burr ch. 22, p. 267. [D. M. & CO.]

2. Mil. A cavity for an explosive charge, as for blowing up a works; by extension, the charge itself.

He [Cardinal Beaton] was himself standing above a mine which before long exploded for his own destruction.
W. M. TAYLOR John Knox ch. 1, p. 7. [A. & S. '85.]

3. Any rich or productive source of supply; as, a mine of wealth. 4. A burrow made by an insect, as in the wood of stems. 5. [Prov. Eng.] A mineral; ore. [F., < LL. mina, < mino; see MINE, v.] myne†.

—common mine (Mil.), a mine in which the circular opening made by the explosion is equal to the distance from the center of the charge to the surface of the ground.—mine'-cap"tain, n. A superintendent of a mine.—m.-chamber, n. Mil. The cavity in a mine for the explosive charge.—m.-dial, n. A variety of magnetic compass constructed for use in mines.—m.-pig, n. Pig iron made entirely from ore: distinguished from cinder-pig.—over-charged or surcharged m. (Mil.), a mine the crater of which has a radius larger than the distance from the center of the charge to the surface of the ground.

mine, pron. 1. Belonging to me; of me: possessive of I. In Used independently in the predicate or in an elliptical expression, as a substitute for my with a noun; as, this pen is mine; his friend and mine. (2) Absolutely, that which I own or upon which I have a claim.

God is so unspeakably good to me and mine. PHELPS in Elizabeth S. Phelps's Austin Phelps, Letter, Dec. 14, '84 p. 275. [S. '91.]

(3) [Archaic.] Attributively before a noun beginning with a vowel or (sometimes) h; as, mine eye; mine host. (4)† Attributively before any noun. 2. Me: objective of I. [< AS. min, mine, < pronominal m-, me.] myn†; myne†.

mine'man†, n. A miner.

mi'ner, mai'ner, n. 1. One who mines, in any sense; especially, one whose occupation it is to excavate ore, coal, etc., in a mine. 2. A leaf-miner. 3. An Australian honey-eater (Myzantha garrula).

—miners' bar, an iron bar pointed at one end, chisel-edged at the other, used in coal-mining.—miners' elbow, a swelling on the back of the elbow, common with miners.

min'er-al, min'gr-al, a. 1. Pertaining to, consisting of, or resembling minerals; neither animal nor vegetable; inorganic; as, mineral acids. 2. Impregnated with mineral constituents; as, mineral springs; mineral water.

—mineral acids, inorganic acids.—m. candle, a paraffin candle.—m. caoutchouc, elaterite.—m. kingdom, one of the prime divisions of nature, embracing all minerals. See NATURE.—m. tallow, hatchettite.—m. wax, ozocerite.

min'er-al, n. 1. An inorganic homogeneous substance of definite or approximately definite chemical composition, found in nature.

Minerals, though commonly solid, may exist in a gaseous, liquid, or viscid state. Water is a mineral that solidifies at 32° Fahr. Mineral substances, often crystallized, are found in the tissues of plants, formed in the processes of life, or drawn from the earth; but, while they are mineral, they are not commonly called minerals in such situations.

Minerals are either the uncombined elements in a native state, or compounds of these elements formed in accordance with chemical laws. E. S. DANA Text-Book Mineral. p. 191. [W. & S. '91.]

2. Any inorganic substance, as a rock or a fossil. 3†. A mine. [OF., < LL. minerale, < mino; see MINE, v.] —artificial mineral, a mineral formed artificially, as in the laboratory, and so distinguished from one found in nature.—min'er-al-dress"er, n. A machine for trimming or dressing mineralogical specimens.—m.-holder, n. Micros. An apparatus for holding and turning a mineral in a microscopic field.—orange m., mineral orange. See ORANGE.—simple m., a mineral found in nature, as distinguished from rocks, which, in the scientific sense, are mixtures of minerals.

min'er-al-ize, min'gr-al-aiz, v. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] I. t. To change from a metal into a mineral; as, iron when exposed to the air is mineralized into rust.

II. i. To mineralogize. min'er-al-ise‡.

—min'er-al-i"za-bl(e, a. Capable of mineralization.—min'er-al-i"za-bl(e‡.—min"er-al-i-za'tion, n. 1. The process of replacing the organic constituents of a body by inorganic fossilization. 2. The addition of inorganic substances to a body. min"er-al-i-sa'tion‡.—min'er-al-i"zer, n. 1. Mineral. An element that combines with a metal to form an ore, as sulfur. 2. Petrol. A volatile or other substance, as fluorin, boron, or water, that facilitates the recrystallization of rocks, as in contact-zones around eruptive masses. See METAMORPHISM. min'er-al-i"ser‡.

min"er-al-og'ic-al, min'gr-al-oj'ic-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to mineralogy. 2. Mineral.

The mineralogical elements or minerals which compose rocks are very numerous. S. W. JOHNSON How Crops Feed div. ii, ch. 2, p. 108. [O. J. CO. '79.]

min"er-al-og'ic‡.—min"er-al-og'ic-al-ly, adv. According to the system or science of mineralogy.

min"er-al'o-gist, min'gr-al'o-jist, n. 1. One versed in mineralogy. 2. A carrier-shell.

min"er-al'o-gize, min'gr-al'o-jaiz, vt. [-GIZED; -GI'ZING.] To study and collect minerals, usually by outdoor practise.

min"er-al'o-gy, min'gr-al'o-ji, n. 1. The science of minerals. It embraces crystallology, and physical, chemical, determinative, descriptive, and economic mineralogy. Physical mineralogy treats of the cohesive, elastic, massive, optical, chromatic, lustrous, thermal, electric, magnetic, and physiological properties; chemical mineralogy, of the chemical properties; determinative mineralogy, of the special crystallographic, physical, and chemical methods for distinguishing species; descriptive mineralogy, of the classification and description of species with their associated minerals and geographical distribution; economic mineralogy, of the uses of minerals in the arts, as jewelry.

The objects of Mineralogy proper are three-fold: 1, to present the true idea of each species, 2, to exhibit the means and methods of distinguishing species, which object is however partly accomplished in the former; 3, to make known the modes of occurrence and associations of species, and their geographical distribution.
E. S. DANA Text-Book of Mineralogy intro., p. 7. [W. & S. '91.]

2. A work on minerals. [< F. minéralogie, < OF. mineral (see MINERAL); and see -OLOGY.] — physiographic mineralogy, the branch or part of descriptive mineralogy that treats of the characteristics of minerals.

Mi-ner'va, mi-ner'vą, n. Rom. Myth. The goddess of invention, thought, and intelligence, patroness of artisans, artists, physicians, actors, poets, schoolmasters, and especially of school-children. She was ultimately identified with the Greek goddess of wisdom, Pallas or Athena, and was similarly represented in art as wearing a long robe, bearing the ægis on her breast, and armed with helmet and spear. She was worshiped jointly with Jupiter and Juno in the great triple Capitoline temple. She bore various surnames, as Capta, Medica, Nautia, etc. Compare ATHENA.

Minerva Medica.
(From an antique statue in the Vatican, Rome.)

mi'ner-y†, n. A mining-district.

mi-nette', mi-net', n. [F.] Petrol. A gray to black or brown, compact mica-orthoclase dike-rock: known also as mica-trap.

ming[1], ming, v. [Obs. or Prov.] I. t. 1. To mingle. 2. To annoy; agitate. II. i. To mingle. meng†; minge†.

ming[2], v. To speak of; tell; talk.

ming†, n. A mixture. minge†.

minge, minj, n. [Local, U. S.] A small fly; midge.

min'gle, min'gl, v. [MIN'GLED; MIN'GLING.] I. t. 1. To mix or unite together or with something else so as to form one body; blend in close union; mix; compound; as, "the web of life is of mingled yarn."

Never did two worthier foes mingle their life blood on the battlefield than Wolfe and Montcalm.
IRVING Washington vol. i, ch. 25, p. 278. [G. P. P. '63.]

2. To join in intimate association or relation; bring into contact; as, to mingle races. 3. [Archaic.] To debase or confuse by mixture; render impure or confused; contaminate.

II. i. 1. To be or become mixed, united, or closely joined; put oneself in familiar relation; intermingle; participate; as, to mingle with a crowd or in a dance. 2. To be shaped by blending or mixing. [Freq. of MING[1], < AS. mengan, mix.] men'gle†.

Synonyms: see CONFUSE; MIX.

—min'gle-man"gle, vt. To jumble or confuse: a varied reduplication of MINGLE.—m.-mangle, n. A medley.—m.-mangler†, n.

—min'gle†, n. A medley.—min'gle-a-bl(e, a.—min'gled-ly, adv. Confusedly.—min'gle-ment, n. The act of mingling, or the condition of being mingled.—min'gler, n.—min'gling-ly, adv. So as to mingle.

Min-gre'li-an, min-grī'li-ąn, a. Of or pertaining to Mingrelia, in Russian Transcaucasia.

Min-gre'li-an, n. 1. A native or inhabitant of Mingrelia. 2. The language of the Mingrelians, belonging to the Kartvelian or Iberian linguistic stock of the Caucasian group of languages.

min"i-a'ceous, min'i-ē'shius, a. Of the color of minium or red lead; miniate.

min'iard†, a. Same as MIGNIARD.

min'iard-ize†, vt. To render delicate, soft, or dainty.

min'i-ate†, vt. To paint or tinge with minium or vermilion; illuminate with red, as a manuscript.

min'i-ate, min'i-et or -ēt, a. Having the color of red lead or vermilion; miniated. [< L. miniatus, pp. of minio, < minium; see MINIUM.] min'i-a"tous‡.

min'i-a-ture, min'i-a-chur or -tiūr, C.[1] -tiur, W.[1]; min'i-chur, C.[2]; -tiur, W.[2]; -tiūr. E. I. Sm. S. Wr.), vt. [Rare] To portray or represent in greatly diminished form or size.

It is an old tale, how Death is miniatured in sleep. E. M. GOULBURN Thoughts on Personal Religion pt. iv, ch. II, p. 306. [A. '67.]

min'i-a-ture, a. Much smaller than reality or than the normal size; on a small scale.

Gersau . . . was once the capital of a miniature republic, shut up between the Alps and the Lake [Lucerne].
IRVING Sketch-Book, Rural Funerals p. 185. [G. P. P. '63.]

min'i-a-ture, n. 1. A painting of small dimensions and delicate workmanship, usually a portrait, or the art of executing such paintings on ivory, metal, or vellum, in water-colors or oils. The art is supposed to be an outgrowth of the method used in illuminating manuscripts, missals, and the like, with ornamental initials in red lead (minium), and then in producing diminished copies of celebrated paintings. It attained high perfection in England under Holbein, Hoskins, Cosway, and Ross, but has been superseded by photography. See MINIUM. 2. A portrayal of anything on a small scale; hence, reduced dimensions or extent.

Children . . . are grown people in miniature, and need as careful consideration of their feelings as any of us. HARRIET B. STOWE Little Foxes, Fault-Finding p. 52. [H. M. & CO. '82.]

3†. Lettering in red, as in manuscripts. 4†. Any meager thing. [F., < It. miniatura, < miniare, paint in minium, < L. minio; see MINIATE, a.]

I hardly know what power ministers so bountifully to the innocent pleasures of mankind. A. W. AND J. C. HARE Guesses at Truth first series, p. 250. [MACM. '89.]

4. [Rare.] To answer a purpose; serve. [< OF. ministrer, < L. ministro, < minister; see MINISTER, n.] min'is-ter, n. 1. The chief of an executive department of a government; one of the persons collectively constituting a ministry; as, the minister of justice.

In Italy, as in France, the Minister of War is always a soldier, and the Minister of the Marine is usually a naval officer.
J. S. FARRER in Harper's Monthly Jan., '88, p. 183.

2. One commissioned to represent his government in diplomatic intercourse with another government at its capital.

By the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, three classes of diplomatic representatives were recognized: (1) ambassadors, papal legates, and nuncios; (2) envoys, ministers, and other agents accredited to sovereigns; (3) chargés d'affaires, accredited to ministers for foreign affairs. By the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1818, it was provided that ministers resident accredited to sovereigns should form a third class between ministers of the second class and chargés d'affaires, the latter thus becoming fourth. The distinction between min'is-try, min'is-tri, n. [-TRIES, pl.] 1. The entire body of officials having in charge the administration of the departments of a government. In the United States this official body is selected by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and is styled the Cabinet. In Great Britain a ministry is selected by a premier possessing the confidence of the House of Commons.

The Ministry has now become a Committee of State officers, named by the majority of the House of Commons from among the more prominent of its representatives in either House, whose object in accepting office is to do the will of that majority.
GREEN Short Hist. Eng. People ch. 9, § 5, p. 634. [H. '75.]

2. An executive department of government. 3. Ministers of the gospel collectively, or their office.

Men who enter the ministry are usually supposed . . . to be actuated by motives which a shower of gold fails to satisfy.
S. J. REID Sydney Smith ch. 5, p. 105. [H. '85.]

4. The act of ministering, or the state or office of being a minister, in any sense; ministration; service; agency.

Heroic believers become such by the ministry of heroic pains.
AUSTIN PHELPS My Note-Book ch. 1, p. 24. [S. '91.]

Phrases:—Asia Minor, the small portion of western Asia that is bounded by the Euxine on the north and the Mediterranean on the south.—m. chord, a chord with minor third and perfect fifth.—m. coins [U. S.], the five-cent piece, three-cent piece, and one-cent piece. U. S. Rev. Statutes § 3515.—m. key (Mus.), a key in which one and two, three and four, and four and five of the scale make major seconds, two and three, five and six, and seven and eight minor seconds, and six and seven an augmented second. The regular members of minor keys are diatonic tones, and their harmony names are the same as those of their relative major keys. But not all the tones of a minor scale are represented in the signature-place as are those of a major scale; seven or subtonic is always represented by an accidental. The scale formed of the tones of this key is called the harmonic minor scale. This scale in the key of A minor is represented thus:

For melodic purposes a musical scale is used which avoids the augmented second. It is called the melodic minor scale. It ascends with six and seven sharped from the signature, and descends with all its tones agreeing with the signature, as follows:

In minor keys the third and sixth from the key-tone are minor.—m. second, a second whose tones are a half step apart.—m. term (Logic), the subject of a conclusion in a syllogism.—m. third, a third in which the tones are a step and a half step apart.

mi'nor[1], mai'ner, n. 1. Law. One who is under age; one below the age when full civil and personal rights can be exercised; an infant. 2. Logic. A minor term or minor premise. See SYLLOGISM. 3. Mus. A minor strain or composition; the minor quality; the minor key.

> The minor of Thy bitter strain.

Where the long summer's cloudless day
Is mirrored in the broad Garonne. HOLMES Mare Rubrum st. 2.

mir′ror, n. 1. An object having a nearly perfect reflecting surface, used ordinarily to view what can not well be seen directly, as the person of the observer, and in science to concentrate or turn aside a beam of light: usually of glass backed with an amalgam of tin or silver with mercury, or a polished surface of metal.

In all the cities of Belgium and Holland the ladies have small mirrors with reflectors, fastened to their windows, so that they can see everybody who passes, without putting their heads out.
C. D. WARNER Saunterings, Cologne p. 37. [O. & CO. '72.]

2. Whatever reflects or clearly represents; an exemplar; pattern.

The Press is the mirror of the daily life of the world, but it performs the very highest duty in selecting what it shall reflect. DEPEW Orations and Speeches, Liberty of the Press p. 375. [CAS. CO.]

mir′oir†; mir′our†; myr′our†; myr′ror†.

Phrases, etc.:—Archimedean mirror, a series of mirrors set in a concave curve to concentrate the rays of the sun, by which Archimedes is said to have set fire to an enemy's fleet.—Claude Lorrain m., a black convex mirror in which the landscape appears with exaggerated perspective; a Claude glass: named from the supposed likeness of its reflections to the paintings of Claude Lorrain, a French artist of the 17th century.—dentists' m., a small looking-glass for insertion in a patient's mouth.—mercury m. 1. A level surface of mercury; used in astronomical observations. 2. A glass with a backing of tin or silver amalgam.—mir′ror-ba-rom″e-ter or m.-thermometer, n. A barometer or thermometer giving an indication by means of a beam of light reflected from a small mirror moved by the mercury.—m.-black, a. Having a very lustrous black gloss: said of pottery.—m.-carp, n. A variety of carp with large and few scales.—m.-plate, n. Plate glass suitable for mirrors.—m.-script, n. Script reversed as if viewed in a mirror: said to be a characteristic symptom of some nervous disorders.—m.-writer, n. A writer of mirror-script.—parabolic m., a mirror in which every section through the principal axis cuts the surface in a parabola, so that rays from a light placed at the focus are all reflected parallel to the axis, and, conversely, parallel rays are brought to the focus. The reflector of a locomotive headlight is a familiar example.

mirth, merth, vt. & vi. To make or be merry.

mirth, n. 1. Pleasurable feelings, or buoyancy of spirits, manifested in jesting and laughter; social merriment; jollity; also, that which causes or calls forth merriment and gaiety.

Mirth is short and transient, cheerfulness fixed and permanent.
ADDISON Spectator May 17, 1712.

To find mirth in others' miseries, and to exult over the ill of others, is worthy only of the devil and of those whose father he is.
SPURGEON Treas. David, Psalm LXXIX. vol. iv, p. 2. [F. & W.]

2†. Pleasure; joy. [< AS. mirigth, < mirige, merige; see MERRY.] merthe†; mirthe†; murthe†.

mo'dal-ism, mō'dal-izm, n. 1. Theol. (1) Adherence to a mode or manner, or a doctrine advocating a mode; as, modalism in baptism. (2) Sabellianism. 2. Logic. The doctrine that modal propositions and modal syllogisms are of fundamental importance in the science of rational thought.—mo'dal-ist, n. One who professes or maintains modalism.—mo"dal-is'tic, a.

mo-dal'i-ty, mo-dal i-ti, n. 1. Modal character: the fact or quality of being modal. 2. Logic & Metaph. The character of a proposition as expressing or asserting a sequence of necessity or of contingency—necessity in the wide sense including impossibility, and contingency in the wide sense including probability and possibility.

In this connection the name 'Modalist,' which has been given to the following treatise, may be mentioned. It is intended to indicate that the reintroduction of modality is characteristic of the new logic. Other features may equal this in importance, but none other has so evidently modified the rules and formulæ of the science. E. J. HAMILTON Modalist p. 4. [G. & CO. '91.]

3. Civ. Law. A qualification, whether of restriction or enlargement, of the terms of an instrument; specifically, a limitation or condition expressed as to time and place of performing a contract. 4†. Modalism. [< LL. modalitas, < modalis; see MODAL.]

mode, mōd, n. 1. Manner of existence, action, doing, manifestation, etc.; way; method; form; sort; as, a mode of living; a mode of thought or exertion.

I believe that one great charm and beauty of antiquity is, that we view it out of the midst of quite another mode of life; and the more perfectly this can be done, the better. HAWTHORNE Eng. Note-Books, Furness Abbey in vol. i, p. 188. [H. M. & CO.]

2. Prevailing style or popular custom; common fashion: especially in the phrase the mode.

SWIFT Baucis and Philemon l. 68.

3. Gram. (1) The manner in which the action, being, or state expressed by a verb is stated or conceived, whether as actual, doubtful, commanded, etc.; denoted by the form of the verb. (2) The verb-form used to express action, etc., in a particular manner: less correctly called mood.

The English modes proper are the indicative, the subjunctive, and the imperative. Certain verb-phrases are also called modes, as those formed by may, might, can, could (potential), should, would (conditional), must, ought obligative.

4. Logic. (1) The style of the connection between the antecedent and the consequent of a proposition; modality: as, with respect to mode propositions are either apodeictic or problematic. (2) Same as MOOD. 5. Psychol. A faculty or a phenomenon of mind considered as a state of consciousness; also (Locke), the nature of an idea as either simple or complex. 6. Philos. & Phys. Sci. The manner of the existence of a thing so far as it is not essential, an accidental or contingent state or quality; as, fluidity and solidity are modes of the existence of metals; heat is a mode of motion. 7. Metaph. That which is a necessary condition of thinking and may have only a subjective existence; as, time and space are modes of thought.

It is the relation of time to space which, in the first instance at least, enables us to think of coexistence as a mode of time. CAIRD Kant vol. i, bk. i, ch. 8, p. 542. [MACM. '89.]

8. Mus. A method or system of dividing the intervals of an octave by placing the steps and half steps of which it is composed in varying arbitrary positions. See GREEK, GREGORIAN, MAJOR, and MINOR MODES, below, and compare SCALE. 9. In lace-making: (1) A small decorative piece inserted in a pattern and giving it its distinguishing characteristic. (2) The openwork or other filling between the solid parts of a pattern. 10. A kind of silk. Compare ALAMODE. 11. [Rare.] Gradation; degree; variety. 12†. Rhythm; measure; harmony. [F., < L. modus, manner.]

Phrases, etc.: all the mode, in general fashion; extremely fashionable. conjunctive m., same as SUBJUNCTIVE MODE. Greek modes (Mus.), the modes in use among the ancient Greeks, consisting each of two tetrachords and one whole step. When the step was between the tetrachords, the mode was named after the tetrachord; when below or above, hypo- or hyper- was respectively prefixed. The modes were named as follows: Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, Hypodorian (or Eolian), Hypophrygian (or Ionian or Iastian), Hypolydian, Hyperdorian (or Mixolydian), Hyperphrygian (or Locrian), Hyperlydian.—Gregorian modes (Mus.), the modes, modeled on the Greek, authorized by Bishop Ambrosius of Milan in the 4th century, and later extended and perfected by Pope Gregory and others. They cover in range the modern diatonic scale from A, the first space in the bass, to C, the third space in the treble, and were divided by some authorities into 14 groups or modes, "authentic" (the Dorian, Phrygian, Lydian, Mixolydian, Eolian, Locrian, and Ionian) and 7 plagal (the Hypodorian, Hypophrygian, Hypolydian, Hypomixolydian, Hypoeolian, Hypolocrian, and Hypoionian). From the fact, however, that the Locrian and Hypolocrian modes are imperfect, the interval-and being perfect, they are entirely rejected by many authorities, and by all practically disused, the number of modes being thus limited to 12. Called also church mode, ecclesiastical mode.—major m. (Mus.), a modern mode, equivalent to the Greek Lydian and Gregorian Ionian, consisting of two steps, a half step, three steps, and a half step. See MAJOR.—minor m. (Mus.), a modern mode equivalent (in its earliest form) to the Greek and Gregorian Eolian. See MINOR.—mode'-book", n. A book of fashions.

mod'el, med'el, v. [MOD'ELED or MOD'ELLED; MOD'EL-ING or MOD'EL-LING.] I. t. 1. To fashion after or make in conformity with a model or pattern; form on or over something as a model; make a model of or for; mold; shape; as, to model a political constitution; to model a garment over a form; to model a design in clay for sculpture. 2. Specifically, in drawing and painting, to give an appearance of relief to, as a face or head.

A statue in gilt bronze could not have been modeled and cast in Rome in 608. R. LANCIANI in Century Magazine Feb., '87, p. 600.

II. i. 1. To make a model or pattern; form models; design and execute material forms either original or imitative.

I rough out my thoughts in talk as an artist models in clay. HOLMES Autocrat ch. 2, p. 30. [O. & CO. '71.]

2. To assume a form like that of a model; take on the appearance of the natural form. [< F. modeler, < OF. modelle; see MODEL, n.] mod'el, a. Answering or used as a model; suitable for a model; worthy to be imitated.

Darius, the model Oriental prince, brave, sagacious, astute, great in the arts both of war and peace.
RAWLINSON Herodotus vol. i, ch. 3, p. 102. [A. '85.]

—model doll, a figure resembling the human form, used for displaying clothing.

mod'el, n. 1. An object, usually in miniature, representing accurately something to be made or already existing; a material pattern of natural size; more rarely, a plan or drawing; as, a model of an invention; a model of a building; to draw a model. 2. Specifically: (1) In sculpture, the plaster or clay original of a work to be executed in stone or metal. (2) A person who does duty as a copy or pattern for painters or sculptors. (3) A work of art intended or considered as a standard for works of its kind; a sculptured canon of art, as that of Lysippus. 3. A thing or person to be imitated or patterned after; that which is taken as a pattern or an example; as, he is a model of goodness; his essays are models of elegance.

The importance of models is not confined to the fine arts. They have their place in every department of human effort where excellence is sought.
JOSEPH ALDEN Elements Intell. Philos. ch. 25, p. 255. [A. '66.]

4. That which strikingly resembles something else; an approximate copy or image; as, she is the model of her mother. 5. A concise or abridged form, as of a treatise. [< OF. modelle, < L. modulus, measure, dim. of modus, measure.]—mod'el-wood", n. The hard, light-colored wood of Nauclea or Adina cordifolia, of the madder family (Rubiaceæ): so called in India.

Synonyms: archetype, copy, design, example, facsimile, image, imitation, mold, original, pattern, prototype, representation, type. A pattern is always, in modern use, that which is to be copied; a model may be either the thing to be copied or the copy that has been made from it; as, the models in the Patent Office. A pattern is commonly superficial; a model is usually in relief. A pattern must be closely followed in its minutest particulars by a faithful copyist; a model may allow a great degree of freedom. A sculptor may idealize his living model; his workmen must exactly copy in marble or metal the model he has made in clay. The archetype is the original form, actual or ideal, in accordance with which existing things are made, especially the original form in the mind of the Creator; a prototype is either the original or an authenticated copy that has the authority of the original as a standard to which other objects of its kind must conform, though the latter sense is comparatively rare. See EXAMPLE; IDEA; IDEAL.

mod'el-ing, med'el-ing, n. Art. 1. In sculpture, the art of constructing in clay or wax a model afterward to be reproduced in plaster, stone, or metal. 2. In painting, the art of representing figures as if in natural relief, so that they appear to project from the ground, or, in portrait-painting, of indicating truthfully the various solid aspects of a figure. mod'el-ling‡.

—mod'el-ing-board", n. A board which in loam-modding is used in shaping the mold; sweep.—m.-clay, n. Clay well worked with glycerin or similar material, in which or with which to model figures, relief patterns, etc.—m.-loft, n. In ship-building, a mold-loft.—m.-plane, n. A very small plane used in operating upon rounded surfaces.—m. process (Surg.), a method of healing wounds without inflammation or suppuration by use of plastic matter from the wounded surface.—m.-stand, n. A small high wooden table with a revolving top, used by sculptors for clay under manipulation.—m.-tool, n. A tool used in shaping and finishing objects in wax, clay, plaster, or other plastic material.—m.-wax, n. Tinted beeswax which has been melted with some resinous material, such as Venice turpentine.

mod"er-a'tion, med'er-ē'shun, n. 1. The quality or state of being moderate; as, moderation of mind.

Moderation or temperance, the keeping of the proper mean between extremes and the tempering of excitement or passion, is not so much a virtue in itself as a means to obtain it.
F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. i, bk. iii, ch. 3, p. 438. [L. '90.]

2. The act of moderating, or of reducing or keeping within bounds. 3. The act of presiding as moderator. 4. pl. [Eng.] The first public examination for degrees at Oxford University: commonly in the contracted form mods.

The second [University examination], Moderations, marks the intellectual progress which accompanies the student after a year and a half or two years' study, and is devoted to Classical or Mathematical subjects of a more advanced character, between which the candidate may choose at will.
A. M. M. STEDMAN Oxford ch. 9, p. 154. [TR. & CO. '78.]

5. [Colloq.] Slowness or deliberation, as in action, speech, or thought. [OF., < L. moderatio(n-), < moderatus; see MODERATE, v.]

Synonyms: see ABSTINENCE.

mod'er-a-tism, med'er-a-tizm, n. Moderation, especially in religious or political views; specifically, the principles and practise of the Scotch Moderates, adherents of the state church, opposed to the evangelical party.

We have read how the blight of moderatism spread over the Church of Scotland and extinguished, as by a chaff bed, all religious fervor. McCOSH Whither? div. iii, p. 5. [S. '89.]

—mod'er-a-tist, n. One who professes or favors moderatism; a moderate.

mod"e-ra'to, med'ē-rā'tō, adv. [It.] Mus. In moderate time; moderately.

mod'er-a"tor, med'er-ā"ter, n. 1. One who or that which regulates, moderates, mitigates, or restrains.

They [the Pagans] all agreed in this, that Zeus, or Jupiter, was the supreme moderator or governor of all. R. CUDWORTH Intell. Syst. Universe vol. i, bk. i, ch. 4, p. 397. [G. & N. '37.]

2. The presiding officer of a meeting: now common only in the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, and in some United States town meetings. 3. Micros. A translucent screen to moderate and diffuse light thrown on a microscopic slide or object. 4. [Gt. Brit.] (1) At Oxford University, an examiner for moderations. (2) At Cambridge University, a superintendent of examinations for honors and degrees. (3) At Dublin University, one who passes first or second in the examinations for bachelor of arts.

Of the successful candidates in each department [Physics, Classics, Ethics, etc.] there are two grades, called senior and junior moderators, the limit to the number of moderators of each grade to be determined, as in the case of honours and prizes, at the previous examinations.
W. B. S. TAYLOR University of Dublin ch. 4, p. 151. [T. C. '45.]

5. A moderator-lamp. 6†. A judge or arbitrator; an umpire. [L., < modero; see MODERATE, v.]

Old events have modern meanings; only that survives
Of past history which finds kindred in all hearts and lives.
LOWELL Mahmood the Image-Breaker st. 1.

2†. Commonplace; common; trite. [< F. moderne, < LL. modernus, < L. modus, measure; cp. modo, just now.]

Synonyms: fresh, late, new, novel, recent. Modern history pertains to any period since the middle ages; modern literature, modern architecture, etc., are not strikingly remote from the styles and types prevalent to-day. That which is late is somewhat removed from the present, but not far enough to be called old. That which is recent is very close to the present, but not quite so sharply distinguished from the past as new; recent publications range over a longer time than new books. That which is novel is unprecedented in kind; that which is new is just produced, but may be of a familiar or even of an ancient sort, as a new copy of an old book.—Antonyms: see synonyms for ANCIENT.

—modern languages, 1. Languages now spoken: but, as a department of education, often subdivided, the phrase is usually restricted to the Teutonic group (English, High and Low German—Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, etc.) and the Romance group (French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, etc.). 2. The modern languages of India (Hindustani, Mahratti, Bengali, etc.), derived from the Sanskrit.—mod'ern-ly, adv.—mod'ern-ness, n.

mod'ern, n. A person of modern times; also, a person of modern views or characteristics. mod'ern-er‡.

mok'sha, n. [Sans.] See MUKTI.

mo'kyl, a. Muggy; murky; dark; misty.

mo'la, mō'la, n. [MO'LÆ, mō'lē or -lī, pl.] 1. Entom. A broad, flat, transversely grooved space on the inner side of the mandibles of some insects. 2. Ich. (1) [M-] A genus typical of Molidæ. (2) A fish of this genus. [< L. mola; see MOLAR[1], a.] mo'lan†, n. A horse's bit. mo'layne†.

mo'lar[1], mō'lar, a. 1. Grinding or adapted for grinding; crushing. 2. Of or pertaining to a molar or the molars; as, molar glands. 3. Entom. Of or pertaining to a mola. [< L. molaris, belonging to a mill, < mola, millstone, < molo, grind.]

mo'lar[2], a. Of or pertaining to a mass; acting on or exerted by a mass or masses, as force.

All nervous stimuli are motions, molar or molecular.
SPENCER Principles of Psychol. vol. i, pt. i, ch. 3, p. 47. [A. '83.]

mo'lar[3], a. Pertaining to or resembling a uterine mole.

mo'lar, n. A tooth with flattened crown adapted for grinding or crushing food; a double or back tooth. In the first or temporary dentition the molars are directly behind the canine teeth, in the permanent dentition behind the bicuspids or premolars. See illus. under DENTITION and HERBIVORA.—false molar, a premolar.—six-year m., the first permanent molar.

—mo-lar'i-form, a. Shaped like a molar tooth.

mo"la-rim'e-ter, mō'la-rim'ē-ter, n. Milling. A thermometer for measuring the temperature of meal as it flows from a spout. [< L. molaris (see MOLAR[1]) + Gr. metron, measure.]

mo'la-ry, mō'la-ri, a. Same as MOLAR[1].

Mo-lasse', mo-las', n. Geol. A Swiss formation chiefly lacustrine, rich in fossil vegetation, partly in the Miocene and partly in the Eocene. [F., < mol (< L. mollis), soft.]

mo-las'ses, mo-las'ez, n. A viscid dark-colored uncrystallizable liquor which in the process of manufacture is separated from crystallizable sugar by draining; sometimes limited to that obtained in the making as distinguished from the refining process. Compare TREACLE. [< Sp. melaza, < L. mellaceus, honey-like, < mel (mell-), honey.] me-las'ses†; mo-los'ses†.

—mo-las'ses-gate", n. A faucet having a gate or closing disk sliding across its end so as to cut off the flow absolutely and prevent dripping.—sugar-house m., a low-grade concentrated molasses, very dark with caramel, once a considerable product of sugar-houses, but disappearing under improved processes.

mold[1], ‖ mōld, vt. 1. To form into a particular shape mould[1], ʃ in or as in a mold; shape; model; fashion.

Sighing that Nature form'd but one such man,
And broke the die in moulding Sheridan!
BYRON Monody on the Death of Sheridan st. 3.

2. Specifically: (1) Founding. (a) To form a mold from; as, to mold a pattern in sand. (b) To cast in a mold. (2) Ceram. To form as by modeling or by shaping on a potters' wheel. (3) Ship-building. To outline, as a timber or frame. [< F. mouler, < L. modulor, measure, < modulus; see MODULUS.]

mold[2], ‖ vt. To cover with mold; as, to mold grass or tem- mould[2], ʃ der plants. [< MOLD[1], n.] mowle†.

mold[3] ‖ i. 1. t. To cause to become moldy; as, hot mould[3], ʃ damp weather molds fruit.

II. i. To become moldy or musty; as, jellies are apt to mold. [< Ice. mygla, < mugga, mist.]

mold[4], mould[4], vt. To stain or spot, as with rust.

mold[1], ‖ n. 1. Earth that is fine and soft, and rich in mould[1], ʃ organic matter.

Vegetable mold is a soil containing much organic matter that has decayed without submergence in water. S. W. JOHNSON How Crops Feed div. ii, ch. 3, p. 156. [O. J. CO. '79.]

2. The constituent material of anything. 3. The earth; ground. [< AS. molde, earth.]—in or under the molds [Prov. Eng. & Scot.], buried.

mold[2], ‖ n. 1. A form or matrix for shaping anything mould[2], ʃ in a fluid or plastic condition, especially when the shape is to be rendered permanent by cooling or hardening. 2. Hence, that after which something else is patterned, or the thing that is molded; form; character.

The glass of fashion, and the mould of form.
SHAKESPEARE Hamlet act iii, sc. 1.

Synonyms: see MODEL.

Compounds, etc.:—close mold, a two-part flask filled by pouring through ingates.—mold'-board", n. 1. The curved metal plate of a plow, by which the furrow-slice is turned over. 2. Founding. A board on which to ram a pattern; a follow-board.—m.-box, n. Metal. A box in which molten steel is hydraulically compressed.—m.-cistern, n. Sugar-making. The tank for washing the molds; also, the one that receives the sugar-drippings.—m.-facing, n. A fine powder or wash applied to the face of a mold to insure a smooth casting.—m.-loft, n. A large room or hall in which the various frames, etc., of a vessel's hull are accurately laid off to full size from the drawings.—m.-stone, n. The stone jamb of a door or window.—m.-turner, n. One who makes metal frames or molds.—open m., a mold without cover, in which objects like ingots are cast: distinguished from close mold.

mold[3], ‖ n. Any fungous growth on food, clothing, mould[3], ʃ walls, etc., especially such growths as form a woolly or furry coating on decaying vegetable matter or in moist warm places; hence, mustiness; decay. [< ME. mouled, pp. of moulen, MOULD[2], v.]

mold[4], ‖ n. A stain or discolored mould[4], ʃ mark, as from rust; used chiefly in iron-mold. [< MOLE[1], n.] mold'a-ble, ‖ mōld'a-bl, a. Capa- mould'a-ble, ʃ ble of being molded.

—mold"[or mould"]a-bil'i-ty, mold'[or mould']a-ble-ness, n.

Mol-da'vi-an, mol-dē'vi-an. I. a. Of or relating to Moldavia, one of the two former Danubian principalities, now part of Rumania. II. n. A native or naturalized inhabitant of Moldavia.—Moldavian cloak, a woman's long cloak, fashionable about 1850, without sleeves, but with a half-cape covering the arms and chest.

mol'da-vite, mōl'da-vait, n. A green, transparent, vitreous stone found in Bohemia and sometimes cut as a gem: probably a variety of obsidian. [< Moldawa, in Hungary.]

mold'er, ‖ mōld'er, v. I. t. To cause to crumble mould'er, ʃ away; disintegrate.

II. i. 1. To decay gradually and turn to dust from lapse of time; disintegrate; crumble away.

Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap.
GRAY Elegy st. 4.

2. Hence, to waste away.

The Christian army had crossed the Mediterranean and was mouldering away with disease on the sultry coast of Mauritania.
LINGARD England vol. iii, ch. 2, p. 127. [E. C. '27.]

mold'er, ‖ n. One who or that which molds. Spe- mould'er, ʃ cifically: (1) Founding. One who makes molds for castings. (2) Brickmaking. One who molds tempered clay into unburned bricks. (3) Wood-working. A wood-molding machine.

Iron-molders' Tools.
1. Lifter. 2. Oval (or dog-tail). 3. Taper and spoon. 4. Yankee. 5. Flange and bead. 6. Square corner. 7. Half-round corner. 8. Heart and square.

mold'i-ness, ‖ mōld'i-nes, n. The mould'i-ness, ʃ state of being moldy. mold'ness†; mould'-ness†.

mold'ing[1], ‖ mōld'ing, n. The act mould'ing[1], ʃ of covering with earth or mold, as tender plants; also, mold used for this purpose.

mold'ing[2], ‖ n. 1. The act or proc- mould'ing[2], ʃ ess of shaping with or as with a mold. 2. Anything made in or by a mold. 3. A more or less ornamental strip on some part of a structure or object, as on a picture-frame; specifically, in architecture, a depressed or projecting member, typically a subordinate member, and usually of ornamental intent, on a surface or in an angle of any part of a building, usually showing in cross-section a complex broken line composed chiefly of curves, but often richly carved, and often used in combination with several others, as in a cornice, capital, base, door- or window-jamb or -head, etc.

The regular moldings in classical architecture are the fillet or list, the astragal or bead, the cyma reversa or ogee, the cyma recta or cyma, the cavetto, the oval, the scotia or trochilus, and the torus.

The moulding of the windows and the cornice along the top of the house were richly carved in stone.
J. H. SHORTHOUSE Blanche pt. i, ch. 2, p. 54. [MACM. '92.]

Compounds, etc.:—dog-tooth molding, an indented medieval molding bearing a resemblance to a row of dog's teeth.—mold'ing-bed", n. A machine for cutting moldings in marble.—m.-board, n. Same as MOLD-BOARD.—m.-box, n. Same as FLASK, 2.—m.-cutter, n. A cutting-tool the edge of which corresponds with the shape of the molding to be made. Molding-cutters were formerly used like a hand-plane, but now are usually rotary, with several cutting-irons, and operated by a machine.—m.-flask, n. 1. Same as FLASK, 2. 2. In dentistry, a jointed instrument to hold the plaster mold and vulcanite model in preparing dentures.—m.-frame, n. A template to shape a loam-mold.—m.-hole, n. An excavation in a foundry floor for large castings.—m.-machine, n. 1. A machine for making wood moldings or for paneling or profiling wood; a wood-molder. 2. A machine for making composition moldings by pressure. 3. A set of rollers for shaping sheet metal, as in cornice-making. 4. Founding. A machine for making (1) loam-molds in flasks, from small complete patterns, or (2) gear-wheels and other large symmetrical objects by a radial frame bearing a template, or pattern of a small section of the gear; a gear-molding machine. 5. A machine for working moldings on the surface of stone. — m.-mill, n. An establishment for making wooden moldings. — m.-plow, n. A plow shaped for forming ridges, completely turning over the soil. — m.-sand, n. A mixture of sand and loam used by founders in making sand-molds. — m.-table, n. A potters' table for shaping their ware. — open sand-m., a process of founding without any cope or top to the mold: used for heavy objects.

Forms of Moldings.
1. The torus. 2. The scotia or trochilus. 3. The cyma recta. 4. The cyma reversa. 5. The cavetto. 6. The Roman ovolo. 7. The astragal or bead.

mold'ness†, mould'ness†, n. Moldiness.

mold'warp", mōld'wôrp', n. [Prov. Eng.] The mole. mould'warp"†.

mold'y, (mōld'i, a. [MOLD'-ER; MOLD'I-EST.] mould'y, Covered or filled with mold; hence, old; musty; decaying; as, moldy books; moldy cheese.

mold'y, n. [Prov. Eng.] A mole-catcher. mould'y†.

Compounds: — mold'y-hill", n. [Prov. Eng.] A mole-hill. mould'y-hill"†. — m.-rat, n. [Prov. Eng.] A mole. mould'y-rat"†.

mole, mōl, v. [MOLED; MO'LING.] I. t. 1. To burrow in, as a mole. 2. [Prov. Eng.] To remove mole-hills from. II. i. [Prov. Eng.] To kill moles.

mole[1], n. 1. A small permanent spot on the skin, generally slightly protuberant, and often dark and hairy; a birthmark.

It may many times happen, that what is censured for a fault, is rather an ornament, as moles often add to the beauty of a face.
SCOTT Count Robert of Paris vol. i, intro., p. 16. [T. & F. '59.]

2. A stain or spot, as in a garment. [< AS. māl, spot.]

mole[2], n. 1. A talpine insectivorous mammal having a barrel-shaped body, very broad fore feet adapted for digging, and very short broad clavicular and humeral bones. The eyes are minute or rudimentary and often covered by skin, and the fur is velvety.

1. The American Mole (Scalops aquaticus). 2. A Burrow of the Common European Mole.

The moles form extensive underground excavations in pursuit of the earthworms that are their prey. Talpa europæa is the common European mole; Scalops aquaticus, the common mole of eastern North America; and Condylura cristata, the star-nosed mole.

2. A mole-plow. [Abbr. of MOLDWARP, < AS. molde, dirt, + weorpan, throw.]

Compounds, etc.: — Cape mole. 1. The coast mole-rat (Bathyergus maritimus). 2. The gold-mole. — mole's-but", n. A sunfish or molid. — m.-bat†, — m.-cast, n. A mole-hill. — m.-cricket, n. A gryllid insect (genus Gryllotalpa) having the fore legs enlarged and adapted for burrowing, as G. vulgaris. — m.-eyed, a. Having small eyes and imperfect eyesight like the moles. — m.-hill, n. A little heap or ridge of earth thrown up by a mole in burrowing. — m.-heap†, — m.-hole, n. A mole's burrow. — m.-plow, n. A plow having a deep-seated pointed iron shoe to make a water-conduit in subsoil. — m.-rat, n. 1. An Old World mole-like spalacoid rodent with small or rudimentary eyes and fore feet adapted for digging. Spalax typhlus is the great mole-rat of southeastern Europe. Bathyergus maritimus is the coast mole-rat of South Africa. 2. A mole-like siphoneine muroid rodent of the Old World. 3. The duckbill. — m.-shrew, n. 1. An American short-tailed shrew (genus Blarina). 2. A shrew-mole. — m.-spade, n. A spade used in mole-hunting. — mole'-warp", n. [Prov. Eng.] A mole.

mole[3], n. 1. A jetty, pier, or breakwater, largely of stone, erected before a port, partially enclosing an anchorage or harbor, so as to shelter ships at anchor from the violence of the waves; anciently, a pier of masonry.

How yon enormous mole projecting breaks
The mid-sea, furious waves!
YOUNG Night Thoughts vi, l. 792.

2. [Rare.] Rom. Antiq. A massive tower-like mausoleum; as, the mole of Hadrian. [< F. môle (< L. moles), great mass.]

mole[4], n. Pathol. A morbid mass formed in the womb, generally connected with conception and giving rise to false pregnancy. [< F. môle, < L. mola, < mola, millstone, < molo, grind.]

mole[5]†, n. A mixture of meal and salt, used in sacrifices.

Mo'lech, n. Same as MOLOCH.

mo-lec'u-lar, mo-lec'yu-lar, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or consisting of molecules.

When a body is heated, a change of molecular arrangement always occurs, and to produce this change heat is consumed.
TYNDALL Fragments of Science lect. i, p. 28. [A. '71.]

2. Resulting from the action of molecules or primary elements; as, molecular changes.

— mo-lec"u-lar'i-ty, n. — mo-lec'u-lar-ly, adv. With regard to or after the manner of molecules.

mo-lec"u-la'ri-um, mo-lec'yu-lē'ri-um or -u-lā'ri-um, n. [-RI-A, pl.] An apparatus to illustrate certain electrical phenomena, on the theory of molecular vibrations.

mol'e-cule, mel'ē-kiūl, n. 1. The smallest part of a substance that can exist separately and still retain its composition and properties; the smallest combination of atoms that will form a given chemical compound.

The molecule, as distinguished from the atom, is the structural unit of physics. All physical as opposed to chemical changes, as evaporation, freezing, and expansion by heat, are supposed to be due to alterations in the position or relations of molecules, while forms of energy like heat and electrical energy, which can not be referred to mass-motion, are supposed to be energy of molecular motion. Compare ATOM; KINETIC THEORY.

The determination is based on the fact that one molecule of pure grape sugar will reduce five molecules of cupric oxide. MARCUS BENJAMIN Sugar Analysis p. 13. [PUB. BY AUTHOR '80.]

2. Hence, colloquially, any small particle.

He laid out every molecule of fidelity upon his employer's interests. W. E. CHANNING Thoreau ch. 16, p. 317. [R. BROS. '73.]

3. The tread or cicatricula of a bird's egg. [< F. molécule, dim. < L. moles, mass.]

mo-len"di-na'ceous, mo-len'di-nē'shius, a. [Rare.] Resembling a windmill; especially, having many projecting wings, suggestive of the sails of a windmill, as some fruits of the parsley family. [< LL. molendinum, mill, < L. molendus, gerundive of molo, grind.] mo-len"di-na'ri-ous‡; mo-len'di-na-ry‡.

mole'skin", mōl'skin", n. 1. The skin of a mole. 2. Any fabric supposed to resemble the skin of a mole; especially, an extra strong double-twilled fustian, dyed after cropping.

mo-lest', mo-lest', vt. To annoy or harm by interference; disturb injuriously; harass; trouble; as, Indians have ceased to molest settlers in the West.

Charles Wesley . . . could not restrain his zeal, but preached to a crowd of them in the inn court-yard [at Oxford]. They were struck with astonishment but did not molest him. ABEL STEVENS Hist. Methodism vol. i, bk. iii, ch. 1, p. 222. [CA. & P. '58.]

[< F. molester, < L. molesto, < moles, burden.]

Synonyms: see ANNOY; BADGER; PERSECUTE.

— mo-lest'er, n. One who molests.

mo-lest'†, n. Trouble; vexation. mo-lest'ie†.

mol"es-ta'tion, mel"es-tē'shun or mō"les- (XIII), n. The act of molesting, or the state of being molested.

mo-lest'ful, mo-lest'ful, a. That molests; annoying; vexatious; troublesome. mo-les'tious‡.

mole'-tree", mōl'-trī", n. A smooth, stout biennial (Euphorbia Lathyris), sparingly naturalized in the United States from Europe, with thick, linear or oblong, entire, opposite leaves: reputed efficacious for expelling moles from the soil. Called caper-spurge. mole'-plant"‡.

mo-lette', mo-let', n. Her. Same as MULLET[2].

mo'ley, a. Same as MOLY.

Mol'i-dæ, mel'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of large gymnodont fishes with a high compressed body truncate behind and with short high dorsal and anal fins connected by a posterior marginal fin; sunfishes or headfishes. [< MOLA.] — mo'lid, n.

Mo"lière-esque', mō"lyār-esc', a. Pertaining to or in the style of Molière (1622–'73), French writer of comedies, noted for the wonderful truthfulness to nature, combined with artistic excellence, of his satires on the follies and vices of his time.

mo-lim'i-nous†, a. 1. Done with great effort. 2. Of vast importance. — mo-lim'i-nous-ly†, adv.

mo'lin(e, mō'lin, a. Her. Resembling a moline or millrynd; as, a cross moline.

mo'lin(e, n. 1. A millstone-rynd or -driver. 2. Her. A cross resembling a mill-rynd; a moline-cross. See illus. under CROSS. [< LL. molinus, pertaining to a mill, < L. mola, millstone, < molo, grind.]

Mo-lin'i-a, mo-lin'i-ą, n. A monotypic genus of coarse stiff perennial grasses with apparently nodeless culms. M cærulea is the blue or purple moor-grass, purple melic-grass, or Indian grass of Europe. [< Dr. J. Molina, writer on Chilean plants.]

Mo'lin-ism, mō'lin-izm, n. The doctrine of the Spanish Jesuit Luis Molina (1535–1600), that the consent of the will is requisite to the efficacy of divine grace, that the will remains perfectly free even under the actual influence of the efficacious grace, and that predestination is consequent upon the foreknowledge of the acceptance of this grace by the human will. — Mo'lin-ist', n. A believer in Molinism: opposed chiefly to Jansenist.

Mo'lin-ist', mō'lin-ist, n. A follower of the Quietist Miguel de Molinos (1640–'97). See QUIETISM.

mol'i-tu'ra, mel'i-tū'rą, n. [LL.] Law. The toll allowed for grinding grain at a mill. mul'ture‡.

moll, mel, C. E. I. Wr. (mōl, W.), a. [G.] Mus. Minor.

moll, n. [Low, Eng.] A mistress. [< Moll, dim. of Mary.]

— moll'-wire", n. [Thieves' Slang.] A picker of women's pockets.

mol'lah, mel'ą, n. 1. A Mohammedan complimentary title given to religious dignitaries and to teachers and expounders of the sacred law. 2. A judge, both civil and ecclesiastical, superior to the cadi.

The mollah, or priest, . . . is at once a religious and civil functionary, owing to the fact that the Persian government is theocratic. S. G. W. BENJAMIN in The Cosmopolitan June, '90, p. 137.

[< Turk. molla, < Ar. maulā, judge.] mol'la‡; moo'lah‡; mool'lah‡; mul'lah‡.

mol'le-bart, mel'ę-bārt, n. A large horse-shovel. [< Fl. molbaert.] moll'bært‡; moulde'bært‡.

mol'le-moke, n. Same as MALLEMUCK.

mol'le-ton, mel'ę-ten, n. [F.] Same as SWANSKIN.

molle'welle†, n. A seal. H. Dict.

moll'-hern", mel'-hėrn", n. [Local, Eng.] The European heron.

mol-lic'i-ty, mel-lis'i-ti, n. Softness, or a growing soft; mollities. [< L. mollities, < mollis, soft.]

mol'lie, mel'i, n. Same as MALLEMAROKING.

mol'li-ent, mel'i-ent (XIII), a. Same as EMOLLIENT.

mol'li-fy, mel'i-fai, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I. t. 1. To reduce the harshness or asperity of; make less cruel, harsh, or angry; soothe; appease. 2. To reduce the hardness of; make soft or tender; as, to mollify the soil.

Pedrillo Pedrugo . . . put a basin of hot water under his chin, and began to mollify his beard with his fingers.
IRVING Alhambra, Moor's Legacy p. 114. [G. P. P.]

3. To reduce the intensity or severity of; mitigate; assuage; as, to mollify pain.

II. i. To grow soft or tender. [< F. mollifier, < LL. mollifico, < mollificus, softening, < L. mollis, soft; and see -FY.]

Synonyms: see ALLAY.

— mol'li-fi"a-bl(e, a. Capable of being mollified. — mol'li-fi-ca'tion, n. — mol'li-fi"er, n. One who or that which mollifies.

mol'li-gut, mel'i-gut, n. [U. S.] A fish, the angler.

mol'lin(e, mel'in, n. A yellowish-white soft soap made by saponifying without heat coconut-oil or fresh fat with a solution of caustic alkali, as potash, and after mixing with glycerin heating carefully: a base for ointments used in skin-diseases. [< L. mollis, soft.]

mol'li-net†, n. A small mill.

mol'li-pi'lose, mel'i-pi'lōs, C. (mel'i-pi-lōs, W.), a. Having fleecy or fluffy hair or feathers; downy. [< L. mollis, soft, + pilus, hair.] — mol"li-pi-los'i-ty, n.

mol-li'ti-es, mel-lish'i-iz or -lit'i-ēs, n. [L.] Pathol. A morbid softening of an organ or a tissue; as, mollities cerebri, softening of the brain.

— mol-li'tious, a. [Rare.] Softly luxurious. — mol'li-tude, n. Effeminate softness.

moll'-row"ing, mel'-rau'ing, n. [Slang, Eng.] Domestic quarreling.

The scene wound up with a great concert of 'practical' cats on the roof, whose diabolical moll-rowings still ring in my ears.
G. A. SALA in Daily Telegraph [London] Dec. 26, '92, p. 2, col. 3.

mol'lusc, n. Same as MOLLUSK.

Mol-lus'ca, mel-lus'cą, n. pl. Zool. A division of invertebrates, especially a branch having an unsegmented bilateral body, four nerve-cords arranged in pairs, two visceral and two pedal, with lateral and median abdominal ganglia. It embraces (1) Cephalopoda, cuttlefishes, squids, and the like; (2) Gasteropoda, snails, slugs, etc.; (3) Scaphopoda, tooth-shells; (4) Isopleura, chitons, etc.; and (5) Acephala, bivalves. See ANIMAL KINGDOM, under ANIMAL.

mol-lus'coid, mel-lus'ceid. I. a. 1. Like a mollusk.

The lower molluscoid animals, most of which are fixed, have no organs of vision whatsoever.
GRANT ALLEN Colour-Sense ch. 3, p. 25. [H. M. & CO. '79.]

2. Of or pertaining to the Molluscoidea. II. n. One of the Molluscoidea. [< MOLLUSCA + -OID.]

Mol"lus-coi'de-a, mel'us-cei'dę-ą, n. pl. Zool. A division of the animal kingdom, especially a branch embracing the brachiopods and polyzoans, which are now known to have affinities with the worms rather than with mollusks. [< MOLLUSCA + -OID.] Mol"lus-coi'da‡; Mol"lus-coi'des‡. — mol"lus-coi'dal, a. — mol"lus-coi'dan or -de-an, a. & n.

mol-lus'cum, mel-lus'cum, n. Pathol. A skin-disease manifesting soft tumors of slow growth, commonly around the hair-follicles. [< L. molluscus; see MOLLUSK.]

mol'lusk, mel'usk, n. One of the Mollusca.

The shells of mollusks generally and even of the ordinary lamp-shells, are hardened by common limestone or carbonate of lime.
J. W. DAWSON Earth and Man ch. 3, p. 41. [H. '87.]

mol"lus-kig'er-ous, mel'us-kij'ęr-us, a. Bearing mollusks: specifically said of certain elongated tubular sacs attached by one end to one of the intestinal vessels of some synaptæ, and containing the ova of a parasitic entoconchoid mollusk. [< MOLLUSK + L. gero, carry.]

mol'lusk-ite, mel'usk-ait, n. The dark-colored carbonaceous matter sometimes found in shell-marbles: due to the petrifaction of organic portions of mollusks.

mol'ly[1], mel'i, n. [Prov. Eng.] A wagtail, especially the pied wagtail (Motacilla lugubris). [Dim. of Moll, cor. of proper name Mary.] mol'ly[2], n. Same as MALLEMUCK. mol'ly-mawk"‡.

— molly cottontail, same as COTTONTAIL.

mol'ly[3], n. [Anglo-Ind.] One of the gardener caste; a gardener. mal'lee‡.

mol'ly[4], n. [MOL'LIES, pl.] [Printers' Slang.] In jeffing, a throw of quads in which no nicks are turned up.

mol'ly-cod"dle, mel'i-cod'l, n. [Slang.] An effeminate man: sometimes abbreviated moll and molly.

Mol'ly Ma-guire', mel'i mą-gwair'. 1. One of an Irish secret society that terrorized the coal-regions of eastern Pennsylvania (1867–'77), committing many murders and other outrages, until broken up by the conviction and execution of several of the ringleaders: so called because their warning and threatening letters were signed "Molly Maguire." 2. Originally, one of a secret society in Ireland (1843) organized to prevent evictions by terrorizing process-servers, etc.: so called from their disguising themselves in women's clothes.

mol'ly-mauw, mel'i-mō, n. [S. Afr.] An albatross (Diomedea melanophrys).

mol'ly-puff"†, n. A decoy for gamblers.

Mo'loch, mō'lec, n. 1. Anc. Myth. (1) A god of the Phenicians, associated with Baal, probably as a sun-god, but differing from him in being almost totally wanting in benevolent quality. His worship embraced the burning, as a holocaust, of children that had been sacrificed, ordeals by fire, self-mutilation by worshipers, etc.

Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood.
MILTON P. L. bk. i, l. 392.

(2) Same as MILCOM. 1 Kings xi, 7; 2 Kings xxiii, 13. 2. Hence, figuratively, any pernicious influence or system that causes loss of life or sacrifice of principle. 3. [m-] An Australian agamoid lizard (Moloch horridus) having a depressed body covered with spines, and a narrow mouth. 4. [m-] A teetee (Callithrix moloch). [LL., the god, < Gr. Moloch, < Heb. mōlekh.]

Mo'loch-ize, mō'lec-aiz, vt. [Rare.] To sacrifice as to Moloch.

mol'oid, mel'oid. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Molidæ. II. n. One of the Molidæ. [< MOLA + -OID.]

mo-lom'bwa, mo-lem'bwą, n. [Afr.] Camwood; a red dye-powder, obtained by pulverizing the red heart of the camwood-tree.

The cam-wood (†) is here called molombwa, and grows very abundantly. The people take the bark, boil, and grind it fine: it is then a splendid blood-red, and they use it extensively as an ornament. LIVINGSTONE Last Journals ch. 7, p. 160. [H. '75.]

mo-lom'pi, mo-lem'pi, n. [Afr.] African rosewood.

mo-lo'pes, mo-lō'piz or -pēs, n. pl. Same as VIBICES. [< Gr. mōlōps (mōlōp-), weal.]

Mol"o-po-sper'mum, mel'o-pō-spėr'mum, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of European herbs of the parsley family (Umbelliferæ), the only species being M. cicutarium, a tall handsome perennial with copious finely cut fern-like leaves often 4 feet in diameter. It is frequently planted in large shrubberies. [< Gr. mōlōps, a weal, + sperma, seed.]

mo-losse', mo-les', n. [F.] Same as MOLOSSUS, 1.

Mo-los'si-an, mo-les'i-ąn. I. a. 1. Pertaining to the Molossi, an inland tribe of ancient Epirus. 2. [m-] Of, pertaining to, or like a bulldog. II. n. 1. A member of the Molossian tribe. 2. [m-] One of the Molossinæ.

mo-los'sic, mo-les'ic, a. Pros. Of or pertaining to a molossus.

His the orator's] action . . . falls into the rhythm of play, where you distinguish . . . the solemn, religious spondee, the swift trochaic run of eagerness or fear, the heavy molossic tread of grief or sorrow. BUSHNELL Work and Play ch. 1, p. 34. [S. '64.]

Mo-los'si-dæ, mo-les'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Mam. The Molossinæ as a family. — mo-los'soid, a. & n.

Mol"os-si'næ, mel'o-sai'nī or -si'nē, n. pl. Mam. A subfamily of emballonuroid bats, especially those with a thick tail extending beyond the interfemoral membrane, short robust legs, and strong incisors; bulldog bats.

mo-los'sus, mo-les'us, n. [-si, -sai or -si, pl.] 1. Gr. Pros. A foot of three long syllables (— — —). 2. [M-] Mam. A genus typical of Molossinæ. [Def. 1 < L. molossus, < Gr. molossos, < Molossus. Molossian. Def. 2 < L. Molossus, Molossian, dog, < Gr. Molossos, Molossian.]

mo-lo'te, mo-lō'te, n. [Afr.] An iron hoe, heart-shaped, having a handle from 8 to 10 inches long. In the Upper Nile and lake regions it is used as currency.

The natives are exceedingly particular in the shape of their molotes and invariably prove them by balancing them on their heads and ringing them by a blow with the finger.
BAKER Albert N'yanza ch. 7, p. 166. [MACM. '88.]

Mol"pa-di'i-dæ, mel'po-dai'i-dī or -di'i-dē, n. pl. Echin. A family of pneumonophorous apodal holothurians with cylindrical, clypeate, or digitate tentacles.

Mol-pa'di-a, n. (t. g.) [Perhaps < Gr. molis, hardly, + pous, foot.] Mol-pad'i-dæ.

— mol"pa-di'id, n. — mol-pa'di-oid, a.

mol'rook-en, mel'ruk-en, n. [Local, Ir.] The great crested grebe.

molt, moult, {mōlt, v. I. t. To cast or slough off, as hair, feathers, etc.

II. i. 1. To cast or shed the outside integument or its appendages, as skin, feathers, or horns; as, the bird is molting. 2. To be on the point of being shed; as, the bird's feathers are molting. [ME. mouten, < L. muto; see MUTABLE.]

molt, moult, {n. 1. The act or process of molting. 2. The season or period of molting.

molt'a-ble†, a. That may be molted.

mol'ten, mōl'tn, pa. 1. Reduced to the fluid state by heat; melted; fused; as, molten metal.

Heat radiated from the sun is eighty-seven times hotter than that from the molten steel. O. N. STODDARD in Vincent's You and I, and Influences p. 331. [F. B. & B. '87.]

2. Made of matter in a state of fusion; cast; as, molten images. 3†. Liquid. [Pp. of MELT[1], v.] molt†; molte†, — mol'ten-ly, adv.

mol'to, mol'to, W. (mol'to, E. I.; mōl'tō, C.), adv. [It.] Mus. Much; very; as, molto adagio (very slow).

Mol"uc-cel'la, mel'uc-sel'a, n. Bot. A small genus of annual herbs of the mint family (Labiatæ), with the petioled, crenately cut leaves, and densely clustered flowers having a peculiar shallow, bell-shaped calyx, whence M. laevis is known in the gardens as the shellflower. Called also Molucca balm, because formerly thought to have come from the Moluccas. [< Molucca, a name of the Spice Islands.]

mol'u-la, mel'yu-la, n. Entom. The head of the tibia when convex and bent. [< L. mola, millstone.]

mo-lun'ghee, mo-lun'gi, n. [E. Ind.] A salt-maker.

mol'ward†, n. The mole.

mo'ly, mō'li, a. Rare. Mole-like. mo'ley†.

mo'ly, n. 1. A fabled plant of magic virtues, with a white flower and a black root.

Take this potent herb.
And bear it with thee to the palace-halls
Of Circé: and it shall avert from thee
The threatened evil . . . Among the gods
Its name is Moly.
HOMER Odyssey tr. by Bryant, bk. x, l. 368.

2. A European wild garlic (Allium Moly). [L., < Gr. mōly.] dwarf moly, Allium Chamæmoly.

mo-ly'b'date, mo-lib'dēt, C. (-dēt, W.), n. Chem. A salt of molybdic acid.

mo-ly'b'de-nite, mo-lib'dē-nait, A. W. Wr. (mol'ib-di-nait, C.; mo-lib'den-ait, E. I.), n. Mineral. A scaly, metallic, lead-gray, soft molybdenum sulfid (MoS_2), crystallizing in the hexagonal system.

mo-ly'b'de-num, mo-lib'dē-num, A. (mol'ib-di'num, C. W. n. A hard, silver-white, metallic element. See ELEMENT.

Molybdenum is usually found as molybdenite, also as wulfenite, more rarely it occurs as molybdic ochre and paterante. ROSCOE AND SCHORLEMMER Chemistry vol. II, pt. II, p. 184. [A. '80.]

mo-lyb"de-nif'er-ous, a. Containing molybdenum. — mo-ly'b'de-nous, a. Of or pertaining to molybdenum, especially in its lower valence. mo-lyb'-dous†. — mo-ly'b'dic, a. Of, pertaining to, or containing molybdenum, especially in its higher valence; as, molybdic acid (H_2MoO_4).

mo-ly'b'dite, mo-lib'doit, n. Mineral. A capillary, earthy, silky, adamantine, straw-yellow molybdenum oxid (MoO_3), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. Called also molybdic ocher. mo-ly'b'din†.

molybdo-. Derived from Greek molybdos, lead: a combining form. — mo-lyb"do-col'ic, n. Pathol. Lead-colic, painters' colic. — mo-ly'b'do-man"cy, n. Divination by means of molten lead, the diviner basing his conclusions on the number, form, and motions of the drops that float on the surface. — mol"yb-don'o-sus, n. Pathol. Lead-poisoning. mol"yb-do'sis†. mo-lyb"-do-par'e-sis, n. Pathol. Lead-palsy, painters' paralysis. mo"ly-nē', mō'li-nē', a. Her. Same as MOLINE.

mol'y-site, mel'i-sait, n. Mineral. An incrusting, brownish-red, yellow ferric chlorid ($FeCl_3$), found usually in the vicinity of volcanoes as a deposit on lavas, etc. [< Gr. molynsis, defilement. < molynō, stain.]

mom'blish-ness†, n. Mumbling talk.

mome, mōm, a. {North. Eng.} Soft; smooth.

mome, n. [OF.] A buffoon or clown; hence, a fool; lout.

mo'ment†, vt. To settle upon exactly or to the moment.

Manners carry the world for the moment, character for all time. A. BRONSON ALCOTT Table-Talk, Character p. 44. [R. BROS. '77.]

3. The state of carrying weight, as in influencing judgment or action; importance; value; as, matters of great moment.

That part of human conduct which constitutes good citizenship is of more moment than that which goes out in accomplishments or exercise of the tastes. SPENCER Education ch. 1, p. 34. [A. '89.]

4. Same as MOMENTUM. 5. [Archaic.] An essential element; important consideration. 6. In the Newtonian mathematics, a differential. 7. Mech. The measure of a force by its effect in producing rotation. See phrases.

8. Philos. The thing originating, calling forth, producing, or causing; the principle of movement or development. [F., < L. momentum, particle, < moveo, move.]

Phrases: — magnetic moment, the moment of a directive magnetic couple, specifically the product of the strength of one pole of a magnet by the length of the magnet. — m. axis of a couple, a vector parallel to the axis of a couple and proportional to its moment. — m. of a couple, the product formed by multiplying either of its forces by the perpendicular distance between them. — m. of a force, 1. With regard to a line or axis, the product formed by multiplying the component of the force in the direction perpendicular to the plane passing through the line and the point of application by the shortest distance of the component from that line. 2. As to a point, the product formed by multiplying the force by the least distance of the line in which it acts from the point. — m. of inertia, in a rotating body, the sum of the products formed by multiplying the mass of each particle by the square of its distance from an axis. — m. of stability, of a body or structure supported at a given plane-joint, the moment of the couple of forces which must be applied in a given vertical plane to that body or structure in addition to its own weight, in order to transfer the center of resistance of the joint to the limiting position consistent with stability. — statical m., same as MOMENT OF A FORCE.

mo-men'tal, mo-men'tal, C.[2] E. I. W. Wr. (mō'men-tal, C.[1]), a. 1. Mech. Of or pertaining to momentum. 2†. Pertaining to or enduring but a moment. 3†. Very important; momentous. — mo-men'tal-ly†, adv.

mo"men-ta'ne-ous†, a. Instantaneous.

mo'men-ta-ri-ly, mō'men-tę-ri-li, adv. 1. For a moment; for the time being.

The law was momentarily extinct in that particular district. COOPER Spy ch. 1, p. 2. [H. M. & CO.]

2. From one moment to the next.

He was momentarily expecting a bite. F. R. STOCKTON Rudder Grangers Abroad, Euphemia Among Pelicans p. 15. [S. '91.]

mo'men-ta-ry, mō'men-tę-ri, a. 1. Lasting but a short time; done in or occupying only a moment; as, a momentary delight; momentary shocks of earthquake.

All physical pleasures are momentary, however intense they may be. T. W. HANDFORD H. W. Beecher, Physical Joys p. 162. [D. B. & CO. '90.]

2. [Archaic.] Liable to death or destruction at any moment. [< LL. momentarius, < L. momentum; see MOMENT.] mo'men-taner; mo'men-ta-ny†. — mo'men-ta-ni-ness†, mo'men-ta-ri-ness, n.

mo'ment-ly, mō'mgnt-li, adv. From moment to moment; each moment.

— mo-men'tous-ly, adv. — mo-men'tous-ness, n.

mo-men'tum, mo-men'tum, n. [-TA, pl.] 1. The power of overcoming resistance possessed by a body by reason of its motion; that which makes a moving body hard to stop; impetus; inertia.

That which you preach will go to the people with the momentum of that which you have been found to be.
AUSTIN PHELPS Theory of Preaching lect. II, p. 17. [S. '82.]

2. Mech. The quantity of motion in a body, as measured by the product of the mass by the velocity; distinguished from energy.

Momentum is the rate of mass-displacement in the same sense that speed is the rate of linear displacement.
G. F. BARKER Physics [4] 69, p. 66. [H. H. & CO. '92.]

3. An essential or constituent element.

The momenta of Quantity are: pure quantity, quantum, and degree. UEBERWEG Hist. Philos. tr. by Morris vol. II, p. 233. [S. '74.]

4. Mus. An eighth rest. [< L. momentum, balance, alteration; see MOMENT.]

mom'ic, n. Same as MUMMY.

mom'i-er, mem'i-er (XIII), n. [F.] A murmur: a nickname of Swiss seceders from the state church about 1818.

mo'mish†, a. Foolish; stupid.

mom'my, mem'i, n. [MOM'MIES, pl.] {Local, U. S.} A duck, the old-squaw.

mo'mot, mō'met, n. Same as MOTMOT.

Mo-mot'i-dæ, mo-met'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Ornith. A tropical American family of picarian birds; motmots or sawbills. See illus. under MOTMOT. Mo-mo'tus, n. (t. g.) [< MOMOT = MOTMOT.]

— mo-mot'oid, n. — mom'o-toid, a. & n.

Mo'mus, mō'mus, n. Gr. Myth. The son of Night, an evil spirit of blame and mockery who found fault even with Aphrodite. [< Gr. Mōmos, < mōmos, blame.]

mon[1], men, n. {Scot. & Prov. Eng.} Man.

mon-. Derived from Greek monos, single, unitary, one: a combining form (form of MONO- before vowels). For words in MON- before o, see MONO-. — mon"a-can'thid, a. Having one row of spines bordering the ambulacra, as in a section (Monacanthidæ) of the genus Asterias. — mon"a-can'thous, a. Having a single spine. — mon-ac'id, n. Chem. Possessing a single hydrogen atom that may be replaced by a negative radical: applied to bases. — mon-act', 1. a. Monactinal. II. n. A rod-shaped sponge-spicule. — mon-ac'ti-nal, a. Single-rayed; rod-shaped, as a sponge-spicule. mon-ac'tine†. — mon'a-delph[1], n. Zool. A monadelphian mammal. mon"a-delph[2], n. Bot. A plant of the class Monadelphia; a plant having the stamens united into a single set or tube. — Mon"a-del'phi-a[1], n. pl. Bot. The sixteenth class in the Linnean artificial system of plants, embracing those in which the filaments are united in a single set, tube, or column, as in the mallow. — Mon"a-del'phi-a[2], n. Mam. The Monodelphia. — mon"a-del'phic, a. Of or pertaining to a family containing a single member. — mon"a-del'phon, n. An andrœcium with the filaments united in a tube or column. — mon"a-del'phous, a. Bot. Having the stamens united by their filaments into a single set or tube; of or pertaining to the Monadelphia. mon"a-del'phi-an†. — mon-am'id, mon-am'ide, n. Chem. An amid in which one of the replaceable hydrogen atoms has been replaced by a single acid radical. — mon-am'in, mon-am'ine, n. Chem. An amin containing a single amidogen group. — mon-an"a-pes'tic, a. Anc. Pros. Containing but one anapest. — mon-an'der, n. Bot. A plant in which the flowers have but a single stamen. — Mon-an'dri-a, n. pl. Bot. The first class in the Linnean artificial system of plants, comprising those having but one stamen to the flower, as in the mare's-tail. — mon-an'dri-an, a. Bot. Same as MONANDROUS. — mon-an'thous, a. Bot. Having but one flower: said of a peduncle or a whole plant. — mon-ar'se-nous, a. Zool. Having only one male for several females. — mon"ar-tic'u-lar, a. Pathol. Affecting a single joint. — Mon"a-scid'i-æ, n. pl. Ascid. The simple ascidians. — mon"a-scid'i-an, a. & n. — mon"a-tom'ic, a. Chem. 1. Consisting of a single atom, as a molecule. 2. Having a valence of one, as hydrogen. — mon-au'los, n. A Greek single-reeded flute: distinguished from diaulos. — mon-au'ral, a. Of, pertaining to, or having one ear. — mon-ax'i-al, a. Having a single axis. mon"ax-o'ni-al†; mon"ax-on'ic†. — mon-ax'on. I. a. Monaxial. II. n. Spong. A sponge-spicule with one axis. — Mon-ax'o-na, n. pl. Spong. An order of monaxonian sponges: contrasted with Ceratosa. — mon-ax'o-nal, a. — Mon"ax-on'i-da, n. pl. Spong. A division of Demospongiæ, variously ranked, with monaxon spicules. — mon"ax-on'i-dan, a. — mon'a-zite, n. Mineral. A resinous, brownish-red or brown, subtransparent cerium-lanthanum-didymium phosphate, $(Ce,La,Di)PO_4$, crystallizing in the monoclinic system.

mo'na, mō'na, n. A slender, brightly variegated, arboreal African monkey (Cercopithecus mona), often kept captive. [Sp. Pg., = It. monna; see MONKEY.]

mon'a-chal, men'a-cal, a. Pertaining to or characteristic of monks or nuns or the monastic life; monastic; monkish. [OF., < LL. monachalis, < monachus; see MONK.] mon'a-cal†.

mon'a-chism, men'a-kizm, n. The monastic manner of life; the principle or practise of living as monks or nuns; celibate religious seclusion; monasticism; also, a monkish characteristic.

Egypt was the parent of monachism, and it was there that it attained both its extreme development and its most austere severity.
LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. II, ch. 4, p. 112. [A. '75.]

mon-ac'id, mon'a-delph, etc. See MON-.

All the alkaline metals are monad elements. W. S. JEVONS Principles of Science bk. I, ch. 7, p. 131. [MACM. '79.]

mon'ad, n. 1. Metaph. (1) In the philosophy of Leibnitz, one of the unextended indivisible and indestructible units that make up the universe, endowed with both physical and psychical properties, not accessible to change from without, and having within itself the power to produce all the changes it undergoes from the beginning of its existence to eternity.

Those primary elements of being, which in themselves are absolutely simple and indivisible, he [Leibnitz] calls monads. They are metaphysical units, or the units both of matter and mind, both of organic and inorganic substance.
F. BOWEN Modern Philosophy ch. 7, p. 114. [S.]

(2) More generally, a substance absolutely simple and indivisible, as the soul.

The pantheistic idea of God is chiefly an effort to conceive an infinite, eternal, unconscious monad, without attributes or personality. M. RAYMOND Theology vol. I, bk. II, ch. 2, p. 308. [N. & P.]

2. Zool. A flagellate infusorian, especially a monadid. 3. Biol. A minute simple single-celled organism; a plastid; especially, a nucleated cell-body having one or a few processes of vibratile protoplasm like a flagellate infusorian, as the locomotive zoospores of various low plants and embryonic forms of various animals.

A Monad (Chilomonas paramæcium). a, oral aperture; cv, contractile vacuole; n, nucleus.

The ciliated monads clothing the horny fibers of a living sponge, need one another's aid so little that, when the sponge is cut in two, each half carries on its processes without interruption. SPENCER Principles Sociol. vol. I, p. 474. [A. '91.]

4. Chem. An atom, radical, or element with a combining power of one. See VALENCE. 5. Theos. The one indivisible spirit in mankind manifesting itself in each person; also, the one indivisible spirit in nature. Compare ANIMA MUNDI; ANIMISM. [< LL. monas (monad-), < Gr. monas (monad-), unit, < monos, only, single.]

2. [Rare.] To dispose of for money; as, to money a cargo. 3†. To furnish with money.

mon'ey, n. [-EYS or -IES, pl.] 1. Any material that by agreement serves as a common medium of exchange and measure of value in trade. Among primitive peoples various articles, some having intrinsic value, as cattle, copper wire, or pieces of cloth, others having arbitrary value, as wampum, beads, or cowries, are or have been accepted by custom as money. From early times commercial nations have used gold and silver, current by weight, as in eastern countries, or in stamped pieces, as in western countries, as either customary or legalized money.

The essential natural functions of money may be stated as including these three: 1. It is a commodity — having a value of its own. 2. It is a common measure of values. 3. It has general exchangeability, and is, hence, a general medium of exchange.

J. M. GREGORY Political Economy ch. 22, p. 253. [V. A. B.]

Specifically: (1) A standard of value and medium of payment established by law; legal tender. (a) Coined metal; standard currency; national coin, including tokens of restricted legal tender; specie. (b) Paper issued by a government or by a bank or banks on the authority of a government and made redeemable in standard coin. (2) In a wider sense, any notes or tokens that are currently accepted in exchange for commodities; cash; specifically, in banking, any paper that is exchanged in settlement of balances, as checks, drafts, and the like. 2. Salable possessions; wealth; property; as, making money; a man worth much money. 3. pl. Cash payments or receipts; individual sums making up an amount. 4. A system of coinage; a denomination of value, coined or nominal; as, in English money; moneys of all nations; a money of account. [< OF. monoie, < L. moneta; see MINT[1], n.]

Synonyms: bills, bullion, capital, cash, coin, currency, funds, gold, notes, property, silver, specie. Money is the authorized medium of exchange; coined money is called coin or specie. What are termed in England bank-notes are in the United States commonly called bills; as, a five-dollar bill. The notes of responsible men are readily transferable in commercial circles, but they are not money; as, the stock was sold for $500 in money and the balance in merchantable paper. Cash is specie or money in hand, or paid in hand; as, the cash account; the cash price. In the legal sense, property is not money, and money is not property: for property is that which has inherent value, while money, as such, has but representative value, and may or may not have intrinsic value. Bullion is either gold or silver uncoined, or the coined metal considered without reference to its coinage, but simply as merchandise, when its value as bullion may be very different from its value as money. The word capital is used chiefly of accumulated property or money invested in productive enterprises or available for such investment. Compare PROPERTY; WEALTH.

[ME. mengrell, dim. < AS. mengan, mix.]

— mon'grel-skate", n. [Eng.] The angel-fish.

— mon'grel-ism, n. The process or result of cross-breeding; a mongrel character. — mon'grel-ize, vt. To make mongrel; as, to mongrelize plants.

mo'ni-al, mō'ni-al, n. Arch. A mullion.

mon'i-con†, n. Same as DAMONICO.

mon'i-la"ted, men'i-lā"ted, a. Same as MONILIFORM.

Mo-nil"i-cor"nes, mo-nil'i-cōr'nēz or -nēs, n. pl. Entom. A tribe of beetles with moniliform antennæ, as Chrysomelidæ. [< L. monile, necklace, + cornu, horn.]

mo-nil'i-form, mo-nil'i-fôrm, a. Resembling a string of beads; contracted or jointed at regular intervals so as to resemble a necklace. See illus. under ANTENNA. [< L. monile, necklace, + FORM.] mo-nil'i-oid‡.

Mo-nil'i-gas"ter, n. (t. g.) [< L. monile, necklace, + Gr. gastēr, belly.] mo-nil"i-gas'trid, n.

mon'i-ment†, n. Same as MONUMENT.

Mo-nim"i-a'ce-æ, mo-nim'i-ē'sē-ē or -ī'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. An order of apetalous trees or shrubs — the monimiad family — rarely climbing, often fragrant, with opposite, entire or serrate, coriaceous leaves, and cymose or racemose inflorescence of small frequently unisexual flowers. The bark and leaves are fragrant, the wood is durable and of use in cabinet-work, and the fruit of some may be eaten. It embraces 2 tribes, 23 genera, and about 150 species. Mo-nim'i-a, n. (t. g.) [< L. Monima, < Gr. Monimē, wife of Mithridates.]

— mo-nim"i-a'ceous, a. — mo-nim'i-ad, n. Any plant of this family.

mon'i-plies, n. [Scot.] Same as MANYPLIES.

mon'ism, men'izm or mō'nizm, n. 1. Philos. The doctrine of cosmology that attempts to explain the phenomena of the cosmos by one principle of being or ultimate substance. Monism may be (1) idealistic, holding that all phenomena, spiritual and material, are from spirit; (2) materialistic, that both material and spiritual phenomena are from matter; or (3) pantheistic, that neither matter nor mind is substantial, both being referred to one original substance. Called also unitism and unitarianism; opposed to dualism. See COSMOLOGY.

Pantheism is sometimes called 'Monism,' by which without doubt it is intended to affirm that there is but one substance, and that substance is God.
M. RAYMOND Theology vol. i, bk. ii, ch. 1, p. 304. [N. & P.]

2. Any theory that refers many different facts to a single principle.

Monism — unity of substance, or unity of movement — has given form to speculation. BASCOM Sociology ch. 4, p. 86. [G. P. P. '87.]

mon'ist, men'ist or mō'nist, n. A believer in monism or the metaphysical theory of "one substance."

The Realists or Substantialists are . . . divided into Dualists, and into Unitarians or Monists, according as they are, or are not, contented with the testimony of consciousness to the ultimate duplicity of subject and object in perception.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. xvi, p. 204. [G. & L. '59.]

mo-ni'tion, mo-nish'un, n. 1. Friendly counsel given by way of warning and implying caution or reproof; admonition. 2. Indication; notice; intimation. 3. Law. A summons or citation in civil law and admiralty practise calling upon a defendant to appear and answer. 4. Eccl. Law. A formal letter from an ecclesiastical judge or from a bishop to a clergyman, warning him to abstain from practises contrary to ecclesiastical law. [F., < L. monition-, < monitus, pp. of moneo, warn.]

mon'i-tive, men'i-tiv, a. Conveying monition; monitory.

mon'i-tor, men'i-tor, vt. [Rare.] To accompany as a monitor.

In that same void white Chastity shall sit,
And monitor me nightly to lone slumber.
KEATS Endymion bk. iv, st. 40.

mon'i-tor, n. 1. One who advises or reproves by way of caution; an admonisher; specifically, a senior pupil in charge of junior classes, or a pupil selected to watch and report upon his class.

Public opinion is, at once, the guide and the monitor of statesmen. T. E. MAY Democ. in Eur. vol. i, intro., p. 59. [A. & S. '89.]

2. An ironclad sitting very low in the water, and having a flat deck, sharp stern, and one or more rotating deck-turrets carrying heavy guns. The first vessel of the type, built by John Ericsson, was named the "Monitor."

By extraordinary energy and executive skill, . . . the 'Monitor' was launched . . . one hundred days from the laying of her keel.

The "Monitor" in its Engagement with the "Merrimac" in Hampton Roads, March 9, 1862. (From a panel of the pedestal of the monument to John Ericsson, in New York.)

3. Car-building. A monitor-roof. 4. A varanoid lizard. The monitor (Varanus niloticus) of the Nile, sometimes 6 feet long, is found in the neighborhood of all large tropical African rivers, and is said to prey on the eggs of the crocodile. monitor lizard:. 5. [M-] Herp. A genus typical of Monitoridæ; Varanus. 6†. A constable. 7†. A backboard. [L., < monitus, pp. of moneo, warn.] — mon'i-tor-roof", n. A raised lengthwise central structure above a car-roof, having side openings for light and ventilation; a clearstory.

— mon'i-tor-ship, n. The office of a monitor.

mon"i-to'ri-al, men'i-tō'ri-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a monitor; specifically, pertaining to the system of instruction called Lancasterian, which includes the teaching of the less advanced pupils by the more advanced, who are called monitors; also designated the "mutual" system.

The system [monitorial] was always worked with moderation; it was free from the wild pretensions of the plans of Bell and Lancaster; and the popilary and the monitorial functions were happily coalesced. Barnard's Journal of Education Mar., '63, p. 151.

2. Same as MONITORY. — mon"i-to'ri-al-ly, adv.

Mon"i-tor'i-dæ, men'i-tor'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Herp. The Varanidæ. [< MONITOR.]

mon'i-to-ry, men'i-to-ri. I. a. Conveying monition; admonitory; as, a monitory look; a monitory message.

He gave Deronda the monitory and slightly suspicious look with which age is apt to commune any object to the keeping of youth.
GEORGE ELIOT Daniel Deronda vol. ii, ch. 69, p. 336. [H. '76.]

II. n. Admonition or warning; specifically, an ecclesiastical monition.

This testimony . . . was the fruit of the episcopal monitory, . . . which virtually incited the dregs of the people to bring accusations against their superiors. J. MORLEY Voltaire ch. 5, p. 224. [A. '72.]

mon'i-tress, men'i-tres, n. A female monitor. [L., f. of monitor; see MONITOR.] mon'i-trix‡.

mon"jou-rou', men'jū rū', n. [E. Ind.] The musk-shrew.

monk, munk, n. 1. Formerly, a man who lived in solitary retirement for the sake of prayer and religious exercises; a religious hermit. 2. One of a company of men vowed to separation from the world, and to poverty, celibacy, and religious duties; a member of a monastic order. See ORDER.

We owe the agricultural restoration of a great part of Europe to the Monks: they chose, for the sake of retirement, secluded regions, which they cultivated with the labour of their own hands. C. W. HOSKYNS Agriculture, Mediæval Period p. 88. [BR. & E. '49.]

3. One of various animals. (1) The bullfinch. (2) One of various South-American monkeys, especially Pithecia monachus. (3) A white-crested variety of domestic pigeon. (4) The monk-bird. 4. Among early printers, a black spot in a printed sheet, caused by bad ink-distribution: distinguished from friar, a gray spot. 5. A fuse for firing a mine. [< AS. munuc, < LL. monachus, < Gr. monachos, < monachos, living alone, < monos, alone.] monck†; mon'ek†.

Synonyms: see RECLUSE.

Compounds, etc.: — black monk, a Benedictine monk. — extern m., a monk residing outside the walls of the monastery with which he is connected. — monk'bat", n. A tropical American bulldog-bat (Molossus nasutus), the males of which live in colonies separated from the females. — m.-bird, n. The friar-bird. — monk'fish", n. 1. The angel-shark. 2. The angler (Lophius piscatorius). — monk'flow"er, n. A tropical American fleshy-stemmed terrestrial orchid of the genus Catasetum, remarkable mainly for its trimorphous flowering, which led botanists at first to assign it to three different genera: frequent in cultivation for its tendency to sport. — m.-monger†, n. One who encourages monasticism. — m.-parrakeet, n. A South-American parrot (Myopsittacus monachus), green with a gray breast, that builds a free ball-shaped nest with a lateral entrance. — m.-saki, n. The black saki or monk (Pithecia monachus). — m.-seal, n. A seal of the genus Monachus, especially M. albiventer, of the Mediterranean. — monk's-gun, n. A harquebus. — monk's-hood, n. Any species of the genus Aconitum, especially A. Napellus, having the upper sepal arched at the back like a hood or helmet. Called also helmet-flower, wolf's-bane, aconite, etc. See illus. under ACONITE and GALEATE. — monk's-rhubarb, n. [Eng.] A European dock (Rumex Patientia), sparingly naturalized in the United States; patience-dock. — monk's-seam, n. 1. The mark left on the middle of a bullet at the junction of the two halves of the mold. 2. Naut. A strong seam formed by laying the selvage-edges of two pieces of canvas over each other and stitching on each side and down the middle. Called also middle-stitching.

monk'er-y, munk'ėr-i, n. [-IES, pl.] 1. Monastic life, ways, or opinion: generally by way of opprobrium.

It was a most attractive way of escape from the disorderly and confused theological wilderness of sin, asceticism, miracle, and the other monkeries. J. MORLEY Diderot vol. i, p. 61. [MACM. '86.]

2. A monastery or its inmates; hence [Slang], tramps, or a district frequented by tramps.

mon'key, mun'ke, v. 1. i. [Rare.] To imitate like a monkey; ape. II. i. [Colloq.] To act in a meddlesome and foolish manner; meddle; trifle.

Now it is inborn in the native American to monkey — or this verb would never have been invented. Monkey he must and monkey he will with whatever is new or strange to him.
Puck [New York] Oct. 14, '91, p. 114, col. 1.

mon'key, n. 1. Any anthropoidean quadrumanous mammal, especially one of the smaller arboreal forms, having a long tail and prehensile feet, as distinguished from apes and baboons. The Old World monkeys, either simiids or cercopithecids, are catarrhine; the New World monkeys, midids or cebids, are platyrhine. Monkeys are found mostly in tropical and subtropical regions, being especially abundant in Africa and the East Indies, and in America from Panama to Brazil.

2. Any quadrumanous mammal, whether ape, marmoset, baboon, or lemur; any primate except man.

HAWTHORNE Eng. Note-Books, London vol. i, p. 323. [STR. '70.]

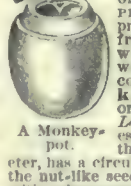
3. An epithet applied, as to a child, usually in slight ridicule or derision, or in affected displeasure.



A little curly-headed, good-for-nothing,
And mischief-making monkey from his birth.
BYRON Don Juan can. 1, st. 25.

4. (1) Mech. An iron block or ram with a catch, used in pile-driving, etc., raised by ropes and let drop. (2) Glass-making. A small glass-melting crucible. 5. A soldering-fluid composed of two parts of hydrochloric acid and one part of zinc. [C.] 6. Same as MONKEY-JAR. 7. [Slang.] A certain sum of money in betting; in the United States, $500; in Great Britain, £500. 8. A small merchant vessel of the 16th century. 9. Naut. A diminutive for a smaller object of the same class as one named: only in composition. See nautical compounds, below. 10†. A small bustle. [< OF. monne, < It. monna (cp. O. It. monicchio, monkey), contr. of madonna; see MADONNA.]

Compounds, etc.: — monk'ey- or monk'-bag", n. A small bag for containing valuables, to be slung around a sailor's neck. — m.-belt, n. The belt to which a monkey-rope is fastened. — m.-block, n. A swivel-block used in gilding or holding running rigging. — m.-board, n. [Slang, Eng.] The platform for an omnibus-conductor. — m.-boat, n. [Eng.] A narrow half-decked river-boat. — m.-bread, n. The baobab-tree, or its fruit. The latter is an oblong woody capsule about a foot in length, resembling a gourd, containing 8 or 10 cells, each cell filled with pulp enclosing seeds about the size of peas. The pulp, slightly acid and agreeable, is eaten by the natives as well as by the monkeys. Called also Ethiopian sour-gourd. — m.-cup, n. An East-Indian pitcher-plant; any species of the genus Nepenthes. — m.-engine, n. 1. A steam-engine for raising a pile-driving ram. 2. A pile-driving machine. — monk'ey-flow"er, n. Any one of various figworts of the genus Mimulus, especially the cultivated species, M. luteus with yellow flowers, and M. cardinalis with red: so called from the gaping or grimacing appearance of the corolla. — m.-gaff, n. A light gaff attached to the mizzen-topmast for the display of signals at sea. — m.-grass, n. Same as PIASSAVA. — m.-hammer, n. A drop-press with a rain which is raised and let drop freely. — m.-jacket, n. A short pea-jacket worn by sailors. — m.-jar, n. An earthenware vessel used in tropical countries for cooling drinking-water. wa'ter-mon"key‡. — m.-pot, n. The hard, woody, pot- or urn-shaped fruit of several species of Lecythis, of the myrtle family (Myrtaceæ), especially L. Ollaria and L. Zabucaja; also, the plant. The fruit, about 6 inches in diameter, has a circular lid, about 2 inches across, which, when the nut-like seeds inside are ripe, separates from the fruit with a sharp sound giving a signal to the monkeys to scramble after the falling seeds. The empty seed-vessel is often used for a pot or vase. — m.-press, n. Same as MONKEY-HAMMER. — m.-pump, n. A sucking-tube. — m.-puzzle, n. A large Chilean tree (Araucaria imbricata) of the pine family (Coniferæ), yielding a hard, durable, yellowish-white, veiny wood, easily worked and polished, and an abundance of edible seeds constituting a main article of food of the natives. It is called monkey-puzzle because its crowded and twisted branches puzzle the monkey to climb. Often cultivated in shrubberies and botanical gardens. Called also Chilian pine. — m. rail, n. Naut. A light rail above the quarter-rail. — m. rope, n. Naut. A rope fastened to the waist-belt of a sailor when working in dangerous positions over the side of a vessel, etc., as in cutting a whale. — monkey's allowance, more kicks than pennies. — monkey's dinner-bell, the woody capsule of the sand-box tree (Hura crepitans) of tropical America, or the tree itself; so called because the loud noise made by the bursting of the capsules when ripe is understood by the monkeys as a signal that a fresh supply of food is ready. — m. shine, n. Slang, U. S.] A frolicsome trick like a monkey's. — m. tail, n. 1. Naut. (1) A short round lever for training carronades. (2) A knotted rope by which to attach a hook, to guard the hand from jamming. 2. An L-shaped window-fastening. — m. wheel, n. Naut. A tackle-block; a hoisting-rope; a whip-gin or gin-block. — m. wrench, n. A wrench or spanner having a movable jaw for grasping a nut, bolt, or the like. — m. yard, n. Naut. A slight yard with which to exercise or train boys on shipboard. — to have or get one's m. up (Slang), to be or become angry. — to suck the m., same as TO TAP THE ADMIRAL. See ADMIRAL.

The Monkey-bread Tree (Adansonia digitata). a, fruit and flower.

A Monkey-pot.

A Monkey-wrench.

mon'key-ish, mun'ke-ish, a. Like a monkey.

The specific moving power to the working-out of speech was not the monkeyish tendency to imitation, but the human tendency to sociality. W. D. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies first series, ch. 10, p. 296. [s. 73.]

mon'key-ism, mun'ke-izm, n. Behavior characteristic of a monkey; monkey-shines.

mon'ni-ker, mon'i-ker, n. [Slang, Eng.] A person's name or signature.

mo'no, mō' nō, n. [Guatemala.] The black howling monkey (Mycetes villosus). [Sp., < It. monna, MONKEY.]

mono-, prefix. Same as MON-. In chemistry it indicates the presence of a single atom of the element or group to which it is prefixed; as, monocalcic, of a single atom of calcium. [The following group includes words in MON- before o.]

— mon"o-ax'al, a. Pertaining to a single axis. — mon"o-ba'sic, a. Chem. Possessing but a single replaceable hydrogen atom: applied to acids. — mon"o-blas'tic, a. Embryol. Having a single germ-layer, as an ovum at the blastula stage. — mon"o-blep'sis, n. Pathol. A form of defective vision in which the sight is clear when only one eye is used, but indistinct when both are used. — mon"o-bra'chi-us, n. Terat. An individual born with a single arm. — mon'o-carp, n. Bot. A plant that bears fruit only once; an annual or biennial: sometimes a tree, as some palms. mon"o-car'pon†, — mon"o-car'pel-la-ry, a. Bot. Consisting of a single carpel, as the fruit of a bean. — mon"o-car'pic, a. Bot. Bearing fruit only once during its existence: said of annual or biennial plants, and of some trees; as, a monocarpic palm. mon"o-car'pal‡; mon"o-car'pi-an‡. — Mon"o-car-pid'e-a, n. pl. Crust. A tribe of phyllobranchiate macrurans in which the carpus of each second perelopod is single-jointed. — mon"o-car-pid'e-an, a. & n. — mon"o-car'pous, a. Bot. 1. Same as MONOCARPIC. 2. Having a gynecium composed of a single carpel. — mon"o-cel'lu-lar, a. Unicellular. — mon"o-cel'lule, n. A unicellular organism. — mon"o-cen'tric, a. 1. Having but one center; proceeding from a single center. 2. Anat. Unipolar: opposed to amphicentric. — Mon"o-cen'tri-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of berycoidean fishes having large osseous scales, a cavernous skull, and ventrals with enlarged spines and aborted rays. Mon"o-cen'tris, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-cen'trid, n. — mon"o-cen'troid, a. & n. — mon"o-ceph'a-lous, a. 1. Having but one head; in botany, bearing only a single head of flowers, as certain plants of the aster family (Compositæ). 2. Terat. Having the characteristics of a monocephalus. — mon"o-ceph'a-lus, n. Terat. A monster having two bodies and one head. — Mon"o-cer"a-ti'na, n. pl. Spong. An artificial order of sponges with a soft ground-substance and without proper spicules in the supporting skeleton, including almost all horny sponges. — mon"o-cer'a-tin(e), a. — mon"o-cer'cous, a. Unflagellate, as an infusorian. — mon"o-cha'si-um, n. Bot. A uniparous cyme; a cyme having only one lateral axis. — mon"o-cha'si-al, a. — Mon"o-chla-myd'e-æ, n. pl. Bot. A former subclass of dicotyledonous plants characterized by having either a single floral envelope or none: nearly the same as the Apetalæ of Jussieu. — mon"o-chla-myd'e-ous, a. Bot. Having the perianth single instead of double, the wanting set being usually the inner, or corolla. — mon"o-cil'i-a"ted, a. Having a single cilium or flagellum. — Mon"o-cœ'li-a, n. pl. Zoöl. The Cephalochorda. — mon"o-cœ'li-an, a. — Mon"o-con'dy-la, n. pl. Zoöl. A superclass or class of vertebrates with a single occipital condyle, including birds and reptiles. — mon"o-con'dy-lar, a. — mon"o-con-dyl'i-an, a. & n. — Mon"o-cot"y-le'a, n. pl. Conch. A division of cuttlefishes having a single row of suckers to each arm, as Cirroteuthidæ. — mon"o-cot"y-le'an, a. & n. — Mon"o-cotyl'i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of tristomean monogeneous trematodes with a ventral sucker. Mon'o-cotyle, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-cot'y-lid, n. — mon"o-cot'y-loid, a. — mon-oc'ra-nus, n. Terat. A double monster united by the cranium. — mon'o-crep-id, n. Spong. A desmic spicule formed in a monact nucleus. — mon-oc'ro-tism, n. Phys. The condition of the normal pulse, which is characterized by giving but a single beat for each contracting movement of the heart, the dicrotic or rebounding stroke of the artery being imperceptible. — mon"o-crot'ic, a. — mon-oc'ro-tous, a. Mon"o-cyc'li-a, n. pl. Echin. A section of holothurians with uniserial tentacles. mon"o-cyc'lic, a. 1. Bot. Having the sets of floral organs, as petals, stamens, etc., disposed in a single whorl or circular series. 2. Echin. (1) Having only a single circlet of basal plates, as in a crinoid calyx. (2) Having uniserial tentacles; of or pertaining to the Monocyclia. — Mon"o-cyr'ti-da, n. pl. Protoz. A section of cyrtoidean radiolarians with a simple shell. — mon"o-cyr'ti-dan, a. & n. — mon'o-cyst, n. A tumor with but one cyst. — mon"o-cys'tic, a. Having a single cyst or sac, as Monocystidæ. mon'o-cyst-ed; — Mon"o-cys'ti-dæ, n. pl. Protoz. A family of gregarinideans with the medullary substance undivided. Mon"o-cys'tis, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-cys'tid, n. — mon"o-cys'toid, a. — Mon"o-cys-tid'e-a, n. pl. Protoz. The Monocystidæ as a higher group. — mon"o-cys-tid'e-an, a. & n. — Mon"o-cyt-ta'ri-a, n. pl. Protoz. A section of radiolarians with a single central capsule, including most species. — mon"o-cyt-ta'ri-an, a. & n. — mon"o-dac'tyl, a. Monodactylous. mon"o-dac'tyle†. — mon"o-dac-tyl'ic, a. Anc. Pros. Containing a single dactyl. — Mon"o-dac-tyl'i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of chætodontoidean fishes having the body very high and extending into fins, and ventrals rudimentary. Mon"o-dac'tyl-us, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-dac'tyloid, n. — mon"o-dac'tyl-oid, a. & n. — mon"o-dac'tyl-ous, a. Zoöl. 1. Having only one toe or finger; unidigitate. 2. Subchelate, as a crustacean. — mon"o-dimet'ric, a. Crystal. Same as DIMETRIC. — mon"o-dip-lo'pi-a, n. Pathol. Double vision with one eye. — mon'o-don†, a. Having a single tooth. — mon"o-don'tal, a. Of or pertaining to a genus (Monodon) including the narwhal. — mon"o-drom'ic, a. Math. Designating a function having only a single value for the same value of the variable. — mon"o-dy-nam'ic, a. [Rare.] Possessing a single talent, or ability in only one direction. — mon"o-dy'na-mism, n. The one-force theory or doctrine that all forms of activity in nature are only various manifestations of one force. — mon"o-dy'na-mous, a. Bot. Having one stamen normally much larger than the rest. — mon"o-em'bry-o-ny, n. Same as MONEMBRYONY. — mon"o-flag'el-late, a. Unflagellate, as an infusorian. — mon"o-gan'gli-on'ic, a. Having but one ganglion. — mon"o-gas'tric, a. 1. Having but one stomach. 2. Of or pertaining to the Calyconectæ monogastricæ. — mon'o-gene, n. [Rare.] An only-begotten one: said of the Son of God. — Mon"o-ge'ne-a, n. pl. Helminth. A section of trematodes developing without the mediation of nurse-forms. — mon"o-gen'e-an, a. & n. — mon"o-ge'ne-ous, a. — mon'o-glot, a. 1. Speaking or having command of but one language; as, a monoglot writer. 2. Composed or published in a single language; as, a monoglot dictionary. — mon"o-go-neu'tic, a. Entom. Having but one annual brood. — Mon"o-go-nop'o-ra, n. pl. Helminth. A section of dendrocœlous planarians with a single sexual aperture. — mon"o-gon"o-po'ric, mon"o-go-nop'o-rous, a. — mon-og'o-ny, n. Asexual reproduction. — Mon"o-grap'ti-dæ, n. pl. Zoöph. A family of monoprionidian graptolites, having hydrothecæ in a single row. Mon"o-grap'tus, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-grap'tid, n. — mon"o-grap'toid, a. — mon'o-gyn, n. Bot. A plant having but one style or sessile stigma in each flower. — Mon"o-gyn'i-a, n. pl. Bot. The name of the first order in each of the first thirteen classes in the Linnean artificial system of plants, embracing those with one style or sessile stigma to each flower. — mon"o-gyn'i-an, a. Bot. Having but one style or sessile stigma; of or pertaining to the Monogynia. — mon"o-gy-nœ'cial, a. Formed by the gynœcium of a single flower: said of fruits. — mon"o-hem'er-ous, a. Med. Enduring only a day. — mon"o-hy'dra-ted, a. Possessing a single molecule of water. — mon"o-hy'dric, a. Chem. Possessing a single atom of hydrogen. — mo-noi'cous, a. Same as MONŒCIOUS. — mon"o-id'e-ism, n. 1. Morbid absorption in one idea or subject. 2. A condition in which a hypnotized subject hears all the words of a spoken sentence, but remembers only the last one. — mon-ol'o-bite, n. A trilobite with the trilobation of the upper surface obscured, as in the genus Homalonotus. — mon"o-lob'ular, a. One-lobed. — mon"o-loc'u-lar, a. Unilocular; one-chambered. — Mon"o-loc"u-la'ri-a, n. pl. Zoöl. A section of vertebrates with a monolocular heart; Cephalochorda. — Mon"o-mas'ti-ga, n. pl. Protoz. A section of pantostomatous flagellate infusorians with a single flagellum, as in Monadidæ, etc. — mon"o-mas'ti-gate, a. — mon"o-mer'ic, a. Of or pertaining to but a single metamere; as, monomeric muscles. — Mo-nom"er-o-som'a-ta or Mon"o-mer"o-so'ma-ta, n. pl. Arach. The Acaridea. — mo-nom"er-o-som'a-tous or mon"o-mer"o-som'a-tous, a. — Mon-om'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of small heteromerous beetles having anterior coxal cavities open behind, middle coxæ moderate, and antennæ received in grooves. Mon-om'ma, n. (t. g.) — mon-om'mid, a. & n. — mon-om'moid, a. — mon-om'pha-lus, n. Terat. A double monster united at the umbilicus. — Mon"o-my-a'ri-a, n. pl. Conch. An order of bivalves with a single adductor muscle, as in oysters. Mon"o-my'a‡; Mon"o-my"i-a'ri-a‡. — mon"o-my-a'ri-an, mon"o-my'a-ry, a. & n. — mon"o-no'mi-al, a. Biol. Consisting of or employing a single term, as in a scientific name: opposed to binomial. mon"o-nym'ic†. — mon"o-nu'cle-ar, a. Having a single nucleus; uninuclear. — mon'o-nym, n. A mononomial name. — mon"o-nym"i-za'tion, n. — mon'o-nym-ize, vt. To designate by a single word instead of several. — mon"o-par'e-sis, n. Paralysis of a single part. — mon"o-path'ic, a. Involving disease of a single part or function. — mon-op'a-thy, n. Pathol. A diseased condition of a single organ uncomplicated with any other. — mon'o-ped, n. [Rare.] One having but one foot: distinguished from biped. — mon"o-per'son-al, a. Theol. Having but one person or form of existence. — mon-oph'a-gous, a. Feeding upon only one substance. — mon-oph'a-nous, a. Having the same appearance. — mon"o-pho'bi-a, n. Pathol. Morbid fear of solitude. — mon"o-phon'ic, a. Same as MONODIC. — mon'o-pho"ny, n. Same as MONODY. — mon'o-pho"tal, a. Elec. Of or pertaining to a single light: said of an arc electric lamp in which the whole current passes through the arc-regulating mechanism: distinguished from polyphotal. — mon'o-phote, n. Elec. An arc-lamp regulator designed to work on the parallel arc system. Also monophote regulator. — mon"oph-thal'mus, n. [-MI, pl.] Terat. An individual born with but one eye; a cyclope. — mon"o-phy-let'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a single phylum; derived from or supposing animals to be derived from one parent form. mon"o-phy-lit'ic†. — mon"o-phyl'lous, a. Bot. One-leaved; having or composed of one leaf. mon"o-phyl'lin(e)†. — mon"o-phy'o-dont, I. a. Having only one set of teeth, as cetaceans. II. n. A monophyodont mammal. — Mon"o-phy"o-don'ta, n. pl. Mam. Monophyodont mammals. — mon'o-plac-id, a. Having but one madreporic plate, as a starfish. — mon"o-plac'u-la, n. A placula before differentiation into a diploplacula. — mon"o-plac'u-lar, a. — mon"o-plac'u-late, a. Having a monoplacula. — mon'o-plast, n. A monoplastic structure or organism. — mon"o-plas'tic, a. Retaining the primitive form, as a single-celled organism. — mon"o-ple'gi-a, n. Paralysis of one part. — Mon"o-pleu'ri-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A Cretaceous family of chamacean bivalves having a deep fixed valve and a shallow operculiform free valve, each with two cardinal teeth and a pit between. Mon"o-pleu'ra, n. (t. g.) — mon"o-pleu'roid, a. — Mon"o-pleu"ro-bran'chi-a, n. pl. Conch. The Tectibranchiata. — mon"o-pleu'ro-branch, mon"o-pleu"ro-bran'chi-an, a. & n. — Mon"o-pleu"ro-bran'chi-a'ta, n. pl. Conch. The Tectibranchiata. — mon"o-pleu"ro-bran'chi-ate, a. & n. — Mon"op-neu'mo-na, n. pl. Ich. A section or suborder of dipnoans with a single lung, as in Ceratodontidæ. Mon"op-neu'mo-nes†; Mon"op-neu-mo'ni-a‡. — mon"op-neu-mo'ni-an, a. & n. — mon"op-neu'mo-nous, a. — mon"o-pol'y-log(ue), n. A kind of dramatic performance in which one actor takes many parts. — mon"o-pri"o-nid'i-an, a. Having serrations on one side of the stem: said of certain graptolites. — mon"o-pros'o-pus, n. [-PI, pl.] Terat. A double monster having but one face. — Mon"o-pru'ni-dæ, n. pl. Protoz. A division of prunoidean radiolarians having shells without transverse stricture. — mon"o-pru'ni-dan, a. — Mon-op'se-a, n. pl. Zoöph. A suborder of hydroids having free medusæ developed directly from eggs, and auditory clubs with endodermal otolites on the umbrella-margin, as in Trachomedusæ. — mon-op'se-an, a. & n. — mon-op'si-a, n. Terat. Congenital union of both eyes; cyclopia. — mon"o-psy'chism, n. The doctrine of the unity of the intellects or souls of all men. — mon-op'ter-al, I. a. 1. Arch. In the form of a monopteron. 2. Zoöl. Having but one wing or fin. II. n. Same as MONOPTERON. — Mon"op-ter'i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of ichthyocephalous symbranchiate eel-like fishes with the body excessively long. Mon-op'ter-us, n. (t. g.) — mon-op'ter-id, n. — mon-op'ter-oid, a. & n. — mon-op'ter-on, n. Arch. A temple of circular plan whose cella is surrounded by an external range of columns, and whose roof is conical or domical. mon-op'ter-al‡; mon-op'ter-os‡. — mon-op'ter-ous, a. Bot. One-winged; having only one wing, as certain seeds. — mon'op-tote (XIII), n. Gram. An adjective or noun having only one case-form. — mon'o-pus, n. Terat. A monstrosity with but one foot or hind limb. — Mon"o-py-læ'a, n. pl. Protoz. A division or order of radiolarians with the central capsule monaxonic and a single perforate area. Mon"o-pyl'e-æ‡.

A Monopteron.

Temple of Hercules (b), in the Forum Boarium, Rome, now Church of Sta. Maria del Sole. a, temple of Vesta, on a coin of Augustus.

— mon"o-pyl'e-an, a. & n. — mon"o-py-re'nous, a. Bot. Having a single nutlet or stone. — mon-or'chid, a. Exhibiting monorchism. — mon-or'chis, n. A person or animal who has but one testicle. — mon-or'chism, n. The condition of having but one testicle. — mon"or-gan'ic, a. Affecting or belonging to but one organ or one set of organs. — Mon"o-rhi'na, n. pl. Zoöl. A section of vertebrates with the olfactory organ single, as in lampreys. Mon"or-rhi'nal‡. — mon"o-rhi'nal, mon"or-rhi'nal, a. — mon'o-rhine, mon"or-rhin'e, a. & n. — mon"o-sche'mic, a. Anc. Pros. Of one metrical form, or containing only one kind of foot: noting a kind of hexameter. — mon"o-se'mic, a. Anc. Pros. Of a single mora or unit of time; monochronous. — mon"o-si'phonous, a. Bot. Having a single axial tube or siphon: applied to certain florideous algæ in which a transverse section of the frond shows only a single large, elongated, central cell. Compare POLYSIPHONOUS. — Mon"o-so'ma-ta, n. pl. Protoz. An order of rhizopods living independently, as amebids. — mon"o-som'a-tous, a. — mon'o-sound, n. [Rare.] A single sound. — mon'o-spasm, n. Pathol. A spasm restricted to a particular organ or part. — mon'o-sperm, n. A plant with only one seed. — mon"o-sper'mous, a. Bot. One-seeded; having a single seed. mon"o-sper'mal‡. — mon"o-spher'ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to a single sphere. — mon"o-spon'dyl-ic, a. Having but one centrum. — Mon"o-spo're-a, n. pl. Protoz. An order of coccidiidean sporozoans with the content of the cyst forming a single spore. — mon"o-spo're-an, a. — mon'o-spo"rous, a. Bot. Having or bearing only one spore. mon'o-spored‡. — mon-os'ta-chous, a. Bot. One-spiked; having or bearing a single spike. — mon-os'te-gous, a. Having a single-chambered shell, as a foraminifer. — Mon"o-ste-lin'i-æ, n. pl. Zoöph. The Cystonectæ monogastricæ. — mon"o-ste-lin'i-an, a. — mon-os'ti-chous, a. Bot. Arranged in one vertical row, or rank, on one side of an axis, as the flowers in certain grasses. — mon"o-stig'ma-tous, a. Bot. Having only one stigma. — Mon"o-sto'ma-ta, n. pl. Zoöl. 1. A section of metazoans with a single mouth, including all but sponges. 2. The Monostomea. — mon"o-stom'a-tous, a. — Mon"o-sto'me-a, n. pl. Zoöph. The Semostomæ. Mon-os'to-mæ‡. — mon"o-sto'me-an, a. & n. — Mon"o-stom'i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of digeneous trematodes with one oral sucker. Mon-os'to-mum, n. (t. g.) — mon-os'to-mid, n. — mon-os'to-moid, a. — mon-os'tro-phe, n. Pros. A metrical composition containing only one kind of strophe. — mon"os-troph'ic, a. — mon"o-syl'lo-gism, n. Logic. A single syllogism, whether categorical or hypothetical. See SYLLOGISM. — mon"o-syl'lo-gis'tic, a. — mon'o-sym-met'ric, a. Crystal. Same as MONOCLINIC. — mon"o-sym-met'ric-al, a. Bot. Same as ZYGOMORPHOUS. — mon-o't'a, n. A vase with one handle. — mon"o-tel'e-phone, n. Elec. A telephone adjusted to receive and transmit only sounds of one pitch or vibration-rate. — mon"o-tel"e-phon'ic, a. Able to transmit only tones of one pitch. — Mon"o-tha-la'mi-a, n. pl. 1. Protoz. Foraminifers with a single-chambered shell. 2. Conch. The Argonautidæ as a division of cephalopods. Mon"o-thal'a-ma‡. — mon"o-thal'a-man, mon"o-tha-la'mi-an, a. & n. — mon"o-thal'a-mous, a. Having a single chamber, as the apothecia of certain lichens. — mon"o-thal'mic, a. Developed from a single pistil: said of fruits. — mon"o-the'cal, a. Bot. Having only one theca or cell. — mon"o-the'li-ous, a. Polyandrous. — mon"o-thet'ic, a. In philosophy, assuming a single essential element. — Mon-ot"o-car'di-a, n. pl. Conch. A division of mollusks with a single auricle in the heart, including prosobranchiate and pulmonate gastropods. — mon-ot"o-car'di-an, a. — mon-ot'o-cous, a. 1. Zoöl. Bearing only a single offspring at a birth; laying a single egg. 2. Bot. Bearing fruit only once. mon-ot'o-kous‡. — mon'o-tome, a. Complete in a single volume; as, a monotome work. — Mon"o-tom'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of small depressed clavicorn beetles with 3-jointed tarsi, second tarsal joints not dilated, elytra truncate, and maxillæ bilobed. Mon-ot'o-ma, n. (t. g.) — mon-ot'o-mid, a. & n. — mon-ot'o-moid, a. — mon-ot'o-mous, a. Mineral. Having a cleavage apparent only in a single direction. — Mon"o-trem'a-ta, n. pl. Conch. An order of ornithodelphians without true teeth in adults and having a bill with long jaws, as in duck-moles, etc. — mon"o-trem'a-tous, a. — mon'o-treme, a. & n. — mon'o-tremous, a. — mon"o-tri'glyph, n. Arch. The space in the frieze of one triglyph and two metopes between two Doric columns: the usual interval. — mon"o-tri-glyph'-

p, point of attachment; l, ligamental groove.
An Example of the Monopleuridæ.

A Monostichous Spike (of Spiranthes gracilis).

ic, a.— Mon-ot'ro-cha[1], n. pl. Entom. 1. A section of hymenopterous insects having 1-jointed trochanters, as most families. 2. Helminth. A section of rotifers with a single rotary apparatus.— mon-ot'ro-cha[2], n. [-CHÆ, pl.] Helminth. A larval chætopodous annelid with a single preoral ring of cilia.— mon-ot'ro-chal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the Monotrochæ. 2. Having a single preoral ring of cilia; of or pertaining to a monotrocha.— mon"o-tro'chi-an. I. a. Monotrochous. II. n. A monotrochous rotifer.— mon-ot'ro-chous, a. Having a single rotary apparatus.— Mon-ot'ro-pa, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of low fleshy herbs of the Indian-pipe family Monotropeæ. M. uniflora is the Indian-pipe or corpse-plant. M. Hypopitys, the pine-sap, is referred to a genus Hypopitys.— Mon"o-tro'pe-æ, n. pl. Bot. An order of fleshy gamopetalous herbs — the Indian-pipe family — frequently included as a section of the heath family Ericaceæ, saprophytic or parasitic on roots, with leafless stems and ericoid flowers with free calyx, simple pollen-grains, and loculicidal pod. There are 9 genera and 10 or 12 species. Mon"o-tro-pa'ce-æ‡. — mon"o-tro-pa'ceous, a.— mon"o-trop'ic, a. Same as MONODROMIC.— mon-ou'si-an, a. Same as MONOUSIAN.— mon"o-va'lence, n., or mon-ov'a-lence, n. Chem. Univalency. mon"o-va'len-cy or mon-ov'a-len-cy‡.— mon"o-va'lent, a., or mon-ov'a-lent, a. Chem. Univalent.— Mon"o-zo'a, n. pl. Protoz. The Monocystaria.— mon"o-zo'an, mon"o-zo'ic, a.

mon-oc'e-ros, mon-os'e-ros, n. 1. The fabulous monster unicorn; any one-horned animal. 2. [M-] Astron. The Unicorn: a constellation lying between Canis Major and Canis Minor. [L., < Gr. monokeros, < monos, single, — keras, horn.] mon-oc'e-rot'. — mon-oc'e-rous, a. Having only one horn; unicorn.

mon'o-chord, mon'o-kôrd, n. An acoustical instrument with one string and a movable bridge, used for the measurement of intervals.

The classic philosophers knew in a vague way that sound spreads like waves, and the relation between the length of a harpstring and its note was laid down in arithmetical rule by Pythagoras, who measured it with the instrument we now use, the monochord.
E. B. TYLOR Anthropology ch. 13, p. 326. [A. '81.]

mon"o-chro-mat'ic, mon'o-cro-mat'ic, a. Of one color.

GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, ¶ 572, p. 543. [W. W. '90.]

[< Gr. monochrōmatos, < monos, single; and see CHROMATIC.] mon"o-chro'ic‡. — monochromatic lamp Photog., a lamp fed with a solution of common salt in alcohol and used to give a non-actinic yellow light.

mon'o-chrome, mon'o-krōm, n. Painting in a single color, or different shades of a single color; painting executed in monochrome, such as occurs in an imitation of a bas-relief or in antique vase-painting. Compare CAMAIEU; GRISAILLE. [< LL. monochroma, f. of L. monochromos, of one color, < Gr. monochrōmos, < monos, single, + chrōma, color.]

— mon"o-chro'mic, a. Done in monochrome; painted in a single color. mon"o-chro'mic-al‡.— mon'o-chro"my, n. Painting in but one color, as distinguished from polychromy.

mon"o-chron'ic, mon'o-cron'ic, a. Existing or occurring at the same time; belonging to the same period. [< LL. monochronos, < Gr. monochronos, < monos, single, + chronos, time.] — mon-och'ro-nous, a. Anc. Pros. Consisting of one time or mora; monosemic.

mon'o-cle, mon'o-kl, n. 1. An eyeglass for one eye. 2. A monocle. [F., < LL. monoculus, one-eyed, < Gr. monos, single, + L. oculus, eye.]

mon"o-cli'nal, mon'o-cli'nal, a. Geol. Dipping only in one direction, or composed of strata so dipping; as, a monoclinal ridge; a monoclinal flexure. See FLEXURE. Sometimes improperly called unicliual.

Probably the most gigantic monoclinal folds in the world are those into which the remarkable horizontal and undisturbed rocks of the Western States . . . have been thrown.

mon"o-cli'nal, n. 1. An abrupt downward flexure of nearly horizontal strata without any corresponding bend to form an anticline or syncline. 2. Loosely, any series of strata dipping in one direction only, as an isocline. mon'o-cline‡. [< MONO- + Gr. klinō, incline.]

mon"o-clin'ic, mon'o-clin'ic, a. Crystal. Possessing one symmetrical plane; that can be referred to three unequal axes two of which intersect, forming unequal angles, while both are perpendicular to the third axis; monosymmetric; clinorhombic; said of holohedral crystals. See CRYSTALLIZATION. mon'o-cli"nate‡; mon"o-cli"no-hed'ric‡; mon"o-cli"no-met'ric‡.

mon'o-cli"nous, mon'o-cli'nus, a. 1. Bot. Hermaphrodite; having both stamens and pistils in the same flower. 2. Geol. Same as MONOCLINAL.

mon"o-cot'y-le'don, mon'o-cot'i-lē'dŏn, n. Bot. A plant having a single cotyledon or seed-leaf in the embryo; an endogen; a plant of the class Monocotyledones. mon'o-cot‡; mon'o-cot-yl‡.

At the close of the middle geological ages and the opening of the Tertiary periods the Monocotyledons become abundant, the first plants with flower and enclosed seed, though with no true floral envelope.
L. AGASSIZ Geol. Sketches sketch iii, p. 79. [T. & F. '66.]

Mon"o-cot'y-le'don-es, mon'o-cot'i-lē'dŏn-ēz or -lē-dō'nēz. n. pl. Bot. A natural group or class of flowering plants in which the first leaves of the embryo are alternate, whence they are said to have but a single seed-leaf or cotyledon. The stems are without central pith or annual layers, the parts of the flower usually in threes (never fives), and the leaves are mostly parallel-veined. It embraces 35 orders, 1,587 genera, and about 20,000 species. The best-known orders are the orchis, palm, lily, iris, sedge, and grass families. [< MONO- + COTYLEDON.]

mon-oc'ra-cy, mŏn-oc'ra-sĭ, n. Government by a single person; autocracy. [< MONO- + Gr. kratein, rule, < kratos, strength.]

mon'o-crat, mon'o-crat, n. 1. A sole ruler; an autocrat. 2. [U. S.] A political nickname for a Federalist.

The war between France and England seems to be producing an effect not contemplated. All the old spirit of 1776 rekindling the newspapers. . . . proves this, and even the monocrat papers are obliged to publish the most furious philippics against England.
JEFFERSON in Irving's Washington vol. v, p. 148. [G. P. P. '63.]

As every syllogism contains three propositions, each of which may be A, E, I, or O (see PROPOSITION), there are as many moods as the number of permutations of four things taken in groups of three, and allowing repetition; namely, 64. Of these only 19 (valid moods) are allowable in reasoning. The valid moods have been embodied in the following mnemonic hexameters, of which each word, except those in italics, represents a mood. The three vowels in each word show the propositions in their order. Certain of the consonants denote the principles by which the moods are to be reduced, or brought to the form of fig. I., which is regarded as the standard figure; e. g., in the last three figures the initial consonant of a word shows that the mood it represents reduces to that mood of the first figure whose symbolic word begins with the same consonant; e. g., Cesare (fig. II.) reduces to Celarent. In addition, the consonant s indicates that the proposition symbolized by the preceding vowel is to be converted simply; p, by limitation (per accidens); k, by contraposition; f, by infinitation or obversion. See CONVERSION. The letter m shows that the premises of the given syllogism are to be transposed (mutari), and the p in Bramantip shows that after simple conversion the premises

The Moon.

Lunar surface as seen through a terrestrial telescope at the time of a full moon. The circular marks indicate the summits of the characteristic lunar mountains. An enlarged view of one of these (Plato), with adjacent alps, appears in the smaller engraving (a). The light regions and radiating lines in the larger view indicate the parts of the lunar surface that reflect light most easily. In the smaller view the lightest portions indicate the summits of the mountains, touched by the obliquely falling sunlight.

earth once in a little less than 27 days, 8 hours, and accompanies it in its annual revolutions around the sun.

The moon shines with reflected light, and its appearance therefore varies according to the amount of illuminated surface visible to us, which depends on its position relative to the sun. These changing aspects, called phases, are repeated monthly. Four are usually distinguished: (1) new moon, when none of the bright surface is visible; (2) the first quarter, when the visible part of the face has increased to one-half; (3) full moon, when the whole face is visible; and the third quarter, when the visible fraction is reduced again to one-half. Popularly, the moon is said to be new when it is seen as a thin crescent. Its diameter is 2,162 miles, and its mean distance from the earth about 238,800 miles. As it revolves on its axis once a month, it turns always very nearly the same side toward the earth, and nearly half of it is therefore never seen by us. It is the largest of the planetary satellites in proportion to its primary. See MONTH; LUBRATION.

2. A satellite of any planet. Mars has two moons, Jupiter five, Saturn eight, Uranus four, and Neptune one. 3. A lunar month; as, we have not seen him for many moons.

In the Anglo-Saxon moots may be discerned the first germs of popular government in England. In the town-moot the assembled freemen and cultivators of the 'folk-lands' regulated the civil affairs of their own township, tithing village, or parish. In the burgh-moot the inhabitants administered their municipal business, under the presidency of a reeve. The hundred-moot assumed a more representative character. . . . The shire-moot . . . was an assembly yet more important. . . . Attended by a reeve and four freemen from every hundred, it assumed a distinctly representative character. . . . The shire-moot was also the general folk-moot of the tribe, assembled in arms. . . . Under King Edgar, the witenagemot became the deliberative and legislative assembly or parliament of the extended estate.

Mor'mon, mōr'mun, a. Of or pertaining to the Mormons or Mormonism; as, the Mormon Church.

Mor'mon, n. One of a sect officially styled "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints," organized by Joseph Smith in 1830, accepting the Bible together with the Book of Mormon, baptism by immersion, and continuous revelation from God to man through the medium of the priesthood. Polygamy has been one of its tenets, but has been prohibited by act of Congress, and professedly abandoned by vote of the people in general conference, Oct. 6, 1890.

The sect originated in western New York, and moved gradually westward under pressure of adverse public sentiment, until it finally established itself in Utah in 1847. The chief executive is the first presidency, consisting of three high priests, standing next in order is a quorum of 12 apostles, then follow patriarchs, high priests, seventies, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. The sect is generally thought to claim authority by revelation above that of the state, which, however, is denied by the Mormons.

The practice of polygamy existed to a limited extent among the Mormons, until it was prohibited by Act of Congress; since then the practice has been abandoned. J. E. TALMAGE, Prof. Mormon Univ., Salt Lake Letter to Standard Dict. Jan. 25, '94.

moth'y, mōth'i, C. (meth'i, E. I. S. W. Wr.), a. Infested by moths; moth-eaten.

mo"tif', mō'tif', C. (mō'tif, E. W. Wr.), n. [F.] Art & Psychol. A motive; subject; theme.

> The infinite variety which painters have given to this most simple motif, the Mother and the Child. MRS. JAMESON Legends of the Madonna, Devotional p. 127. [L. G. & CO. '52.]

mo-tif'ic, mo-tif'ic, a. [Rare.] Producing motion. [< L. motus, motion (< moveo, move), + facio, make.]

mo'til(e, mō'til, a. Having or exercising powers of spontaneous motion. [< L. motus, pp. of moveo, move.]

> From the spore or germination there creeps out a naked motile mass of protoplasm.
> H. J. WEBBER in American Naturalist Apr., '92, p. 287.

mo'til(e, n. A person in whose mind motor images are specially distinct.

mo-til'i-ty, mo-til'i-ti, n. The power of motion; faculty of moving.

mo'tion, mō'shun, v. I. t. 1. To direct or guide by a sign or gesture; as, he motioned her to be silent; to motion one toward the door. 2. [Rare.] To advise; counsel; move. 3†. To propose.

II. i. 1. To make a significant gesture for the purpose of directing or guiding; as, to motion to one to close the door. 2. [Rare.] To make proposal; offer plans.

mo'tion, n. 1. The act or process of moving, or the state of being moved; passage from one point to another; change of position in relation to some assumed point or center.

Mechanical motion may be (1) simple motion, as in (a) translation or (b) rotation, or (2) compound motion, that is, consisting of translation and rotation at the same time, as in spiral motion.

2. A combination of parts, in a mechanism, to produce a particular effect or result, as moving a slide-valve; as, a link-motion. 3. A setting forth, for consideration, of a plan of action or course of procedure; a formal proposition or proposal, especially one made in a deliberative council or legislative body; as, a motion to adjourn. 4. Law. An application to a court in a case before it, to obtain an order or rule directing some act to be done.

> The hearing to-day was on a motion to discharge the trustee and also on a motion by the plaintiff to have the motion to discharge continued. New-York Tribune Oct. 21, '91, p. 1, col. 1.

5. A significant movement of the limbs, eyes, etc., conveying information or giving directions; a gesture; as, she made motions to him to be quiet. 6. An act of defecation; an alvine discharge from the bowels; a movement. 7. An impulse to action; an inward working of governing ideas; incitement; instigation; as, to do a thing of one's own motion.

> In the spiritual life, when the incipient motions and affections are very feeble, the person may eventually become a mature and eminent Christian. A. ALEXANDER Thoughts on Religious Experience ch. 3, p. 63. [P. B. P.]

8. Mus. Melodic progression. It is conjunct motion when by single degrees; disjunct m., when by skips; similar or direct m., when two parts move in the same direction; contrary m., when in opposite directions; oblique m., when one part remains stationary while the other moves.

9. Art. The suggestion of change in the movement or action of a figure, expressed by its attitude. 10. Astron. Angular velocity. Called direct motion when from west to east; retrograde m., when from east to west. 11. Mil. One of the parts into which a movement in the manual of arms is separated, to facilitate the training of recruits. 12. Anc. Philos. Change in general, including, according to Aristotle, (1) change of place, (2) generation and corruption, (3) alteration, and (4) augmentation and diminution. 13. [Rare.] Carriage of the body; gait; port; style. 14†. The power of moving; animal life, with its moving faculties. 15†. A puppet or puppet-show. [F., < L. motio(n-), < motus, pp. of moveo, move.]

Synonyms: act, action, change, move, movement, passage, transit, transition. Motion may be either abstract or concrete, more frequently the former; movement is always concrete, that is, considered in connection with the thing that moves or is moved; thus we speak of the movements of the planets, but of the laws of planetary motion; of military movements, but of perpetual motion. Move is used chiefly of contests or competition, as in chess or politics; as, it is your move; a shrewd move of the opposition. We now rarely speak of mental or spiritual motions, but rather of mental or spiritual acts or processes, or of the laws of mental action, but a formal proposal of action in a deliberative assembly is termed a motion. See ACT; DRIFT. — Antonyms: quiescence, quiet, repose, rest, stillness.

Phrases, etc.: — accelerated motion, motion of which the velocity is continually increasing, as the velocity of a freely falling body. — angular m., motion regarded as measured by the increase of the angle made with some standard direction by a line drawn from the moving object to a fixed point; specifically, motion as projected on a distant sphere by the eye of an observer at the center. Thus, the angular motion of a body passing the observer at a uniform rate and in a straight line increases till it is opposite him and then decreases. — lateral m. (Mech.), a side-wise motion, particularly side-motion that is of no value; the side-play of a moving portion of a machine. — lost m. Mech. 1. Motion of a part of a machine producing no useful work, either because of wear in the bearings, through imperfect mechanical construction, or because the designer was unable to find a better movement. 2. The return movement of part of a machine. — mo'tion-bar", n. Steam-engin. A guide-bar. — m.-curve, n. A curve showing the successive positions of the link or of the slide-valve of a steam-engine, particularly of a locomotive. — m.-distortion, n. A distortion in a spectrum-line, caused by movements in the source of light. — m.-indicator, n. A speed-indicator, as a tachometer, showing the number of rotations in a specified time. — m.-man†, n. A showman. — natural m., a physical motion not under the control of the will, as pulsation. — parallel m. 1. Mech. (1) A motion for converting arc-motion into reciprocating right-line motion. (2) A linked mechanism of which one point moves in a right line: usually connecting a working-beam and a piston-rod. 2. Mus. Same as MOTION, 8. — passive m. (Med.), motion due to external force, not caused by voluntary muscular efforts. — perpetual m. 1. A mechanical motion that once started will continue until the parts are worn out: impossible only because of the existence of friction. The motion of the earth is a close approach to it. 2. A mechanical motion creating energy — that is, doing work without using up energy from any source. Its impossibility is a necessary result of the theory of energy, and much of modern physics is based upon this fact. — positive m., such an arrangement of a part or parts of a machine that other parts must move in accordance with them. A train of gears is an illustration. Springs and weights are not positive, being liable to interference. — primary m. (Astron.), diurnal motion: said of stars. — proper m. (Astron.), apparent motion of a star, due to actual movement of the star itself; any motion that alters the position of a star in the map of the heavens. — secondary m. (Astron.), proper motion.

— mo'tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to motion. — mo'tion-less, a. — mo'tion-less-ly, adv.

mo'tiv-ate, mō'tiv-ēt, vt. [-A'TED; -A'TING.] To motive; act as the motive for; instigate; induce.

mo'tive, mō'tiv, vt. [MO'TIVED; MO'TIV-ING.] 1. To act as a motive for; prompt; as, a desire for justice motived his actions. 2. To base upon something as a motive.

> We now compare these three representative plays of Shakespeare, 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Hamlet,' and 'The Tempest,' with three works of Chaucer, which are respectively motived upon substantially the same themes. SIDNEY LANIER in The Independent [New York] Sept. 24, '91, p. 1, col. 3.

mo'tive, a. Having power to move, or tending to move; causing motion.

> Gravity is a motive quality. W. WHEWELL Hist. Inductive Sciences vol. i, bk. iv, ch. 4, p. 324. [J. W. P. '37.]

[< LL. motivus, < L. motus, pp. of moveo, move.]

— motive power. 1. The power, or means of generating power, by which motion is imparted to an object, machine, etc.; specifically, in railroad affairs, the locomotives of a road, collectively. 2. Figuratively, any impelling force. — m. temperament (Phren.), that temperament in which the framework of the system, the bones and the muscles, predominate: indicated also by strong dark hair, dark complexion, firm and often rough texture, and great endurance. — m. theme, a musical theme proposed for development.

mo'tive, n. 1. That which incites to motion or action; incentive; inducement; specifically, in the mental sciences, that which induces choice or volition or furnishes its occasion or reason. Both the objects or occasions of action and its causes are often loosely included in the term motive. More strictly, the motive as the end, object, occasion, or reason of choice and volition, is to be distinguished from the cause of choice or volition, which cause may be either external and necessary, so as to abridge or destroy freedom, or internal and voluntary, in the self-activity of the agent himself, so as to secure and confirm freedom. Compare FREE; FREEDOM.

The motives of men are intricate and complicated. . . . It suffices to the wise to profit by the actions, and leave the motives in shade. BULWER-LYTTON My Novel bk. xi, ch. 10, p. 297. [H. '52.]

2. A predominant idea, conception, or design. Specifically: (1) In the fine arts, the artist's ideal of his subject, the desire for the realization of which governs all the details of his work; also, a feature, design, or figure that prevails in varying forms throughout the composition of a work.

Almost everything is a subject, but it only becomes a motive when an artist is moved. HAMERTON Etching and Etchers bk. i, ch. 15, p. 67. [R. BROS. '76.]

(2) In music, the subject or theme of a composition. 3. One who or that which causes or instigates; a moving cause. 4†. Movement; also, motion; proposition. [< F. motif, < LL. motivum. < motivus; see MOTIVE, a.] mo"tyf'+.

Synonyms: consideration, ground, incentive, incitement, inducement, influence, reason. Motive may signify either a mental impulse, or something external that is an object of desire, and so an inducement or incitement to action; thus, we can say "his motive was hatred," or "his motive was money." Compare CAUSE; IMPULSE. — Prepositions: the motive of or for the act.

—leading motive, a musical phrase typical of some character, place, or principle involved in the action of a musical drama, introduced always in connection with that which it typifies; used especially in the Wagnerian operas. leit'mo-tif'".

mo-tiv'i-ty, mo-tiv'i-ti, n. 1. The power of producing motion; motive energy.

That Matter, . . . which cannot think, will, or originate motions, should communicate thought, volition, and motivity is plainly impossible. DWIGHT Theology vol. i, ser. ii, p. 98. [H. '46.]

2. [Rare.] The quality of being influenced by motives. 3. [Rare.] Physics. Availability for work: said of heat.

mot'ley+, vt. To diversify; mark with different colors.

mot'ley, met'ly, a. 1. Variegated in color; consisting of various colors; party-colored; dappled; as, a motley coat. 2. Clothed in variegated garments; as, a motley fool. 3. Composed of heterogeneous or inharmonious elements; as, a motley crowd.

The streets [of Smyrna] are very narrow and dark, and filled with a motley and, in general, a dirty population. W. F. LYNCH Jordan and Dead Sea ch. 3, p. 39. [R. & CO. '52.]

mot'ley, n. 1. A dress of various colors, such as was formerly worn by court jesters. 2. A jester or fool in motley garments. 3. A medley, as of colors. mot'ly+; motte'ley+.—mot'ley-mind"ed, a. Possessed of a mind resembling motley in the diversity, extravagance, or inconsistency of its ideas.

mot'mot, met'met, n. A momotoid bird of the warmer parts of America, related to the kingfishers, having feathers with aftershafts and mandibles with serrated edges; a sawbill. The middle pair of tail-feathers are usually elongated and spatulate or racket-shaped, a peculiarity supposed by some to be caused by the bird nibbling off the barbs. Motmots feed mostly on insects, snails, and small reptiles, and are commonly greenish or bluish. The blue-crowned motmot (Momotus caerulicipes) reaches the Mexican border of the United States. [Named from its cry.]

mo'to. mō'tō, n. [It.] Mus. Motion; movement.

mo'to-graph, mō'to-graf, n. Elec. A device in which friction between two relatively moving conductors is diminished periodically by an electric current passed through them at their point of contact: used as a telephone receiver, as a telegraphic receiver, and as a substitute for an electromagnet in various machines. Called also electromotograph. [< L. motus, motion (< pp. motus; see MOTION), + Gr. graphō, write.]—mo'to-graph'ic, a.

mot'on², n. Mutton. —mot'on-er+, n. A muttoner.

mo'to-phone, mō'to-fōn, n. Elec. A device in which a diaphragm vibrated by sound-waves is made to rotate a ratchet-wheel; a sound-engine. [< L. motus (see MOTOGRAPH) + Gr. phōnē, voice.]

mo'tor, mō'tęr, n. 1. Causing, producing, or imparting motion. 2. Transmitting impulses from the nerve-centers to the muscles: opposed to sensor. Compare EFFERENT. 3. Of or pertaining to the motor nerves.

My own children are continually startling me by reproducing the very words, gestures, and motor tendencies which were my own forty years ago. ELAM Physician's Problems p. 24. [L. & S.]

—motor nerve, a nerve that transmits impulses to the muscles.

mo'tor, n. One who or that which produces or imparts motion or mechanical power. Specifically: (1) A machine for producing or causing motion; especially, one that acts by transmuting some other kind of energy into mechanical energy, or energy of position into that of motion; a prime mover, as a steam-engine, windmill, water-wheel, or reversed dynamo. See illus. under ELECTRIC MOTOR. (2) A motor nerve. (3) Math. An operator denoting the displacement of a rigid body in space. [LL., one who moves, < L. motus, pp. of movere, move.]

—domestic motor, any small motor for domestic use, as running a sewing-machine.—electric m., see ELECTRIC. —first m., a prime mover. —hydraulic m., a motor driven by a current of water. —mo'tor-car", n. 1. A railway-car carrying its own motor, a combined passenger-car and locomotive. 2. An electric street-car that draws a trailing-car. —m.-man, n. A man who operates a motor, especially on an electric car. mo"tor-neer'+.—m. oculi, the third cranial nerve, which supplies most of the muscles of the eye.—m.-printer, n. A printing telegraph employing clockwork mechanism.

mo-to'ri-al, mo-tō'ri-al, a. Of or pertaining to motion or a motor, especially a motor nerve. [< LL. motorius, < motor; see MOTOR.] mo'to-ry‡.

mo-to'ri-um, mo-tō'ri-um, n. [-RI-A, pl.] [LL.] The portion of the nervous organism that moves or is instrumental in motion or the exertion of motor influence: opposed to sensorium.

The motorium is the portion of the nervous organism through which self sends messages to the outer world.
J. BALDWIN Elementary Psychol. pt. i, ch. 5, p. 47. [A. '88.]

mo-to'ri-us, mo-tō'ri-us, n. [-RI-I, -ri-ai or -i, pl.] [LL.] A motor nerve.

mo-tor'pa-thy, mo-tōr'pa-thi, n. Med. Kinesitherapy; the movement-cure. [< L. motor (see MOTOR) + -PATHY.]—mo"tor-path'ic, a.

mott², n. Same as MOT¹.

motte, met, n. [Local, U. S.] A clump of trees in a prairie.

mot-tet'to, met-tet'tō, n. [It.] Same as MOTET.

mot'tie, a. Same as MOTTY.

mot'tle, met'l, vt. [MOT'TLED; MOT'TLING.] To mark with spots of different color or shades of color; blotch; variegate. [< MOTLEY.]

—mot'tled, pa. 1. Marked with spots of different color or shades of color; blotched; variegated. 2. Metal. Having mottle: said of pig iron.—mot'tling, n. A varicolored appearance or marking of a surface.

mot'tle, n. The spotted, blotched, or variegated appearance of any mottled surface, as of wood or marble; especially, in metallurgy, the appearance of pig iron of a quality between white and gray. —mot'tle-faced", a.

mot'to, met'ō, n. 1. An expressive word or pithy sentence enunciating some guiding rule of life, principle, or faith, or attached to an essay, discourse, or the like, as suggestive of its subject-matter. 2. Her. A phrase accompanying a crest or coat of arms, and sometimes alluding punningly to the composition of the name, or to a historical event: now placed upon a scroll or ribbon below the shield, or above or below the crest.

The Douglas motto, 'Tender and True,' seems to me the worthiest of the strongest breast. T. W. HIGGINSON Margaret Fuller Ossoli ch. 5, p. 73. [H. M. & CO. '84.]

3. [U. S.] A paper package containing a sweetmeat or a small quantity of candy and a scrap of paper bearing a motto or verse of poetry. mot'to-kiss"+. [Eng.]. 4. The printed sentiment enclosed in a motto-kiss. [It.; see MOTET.]

Synonyms: see ADAGE.

—mot'toed, a. Furnished with or bearing a motto.

mot'tram-ite, met'tram-āit, n. Mineral. A resinous, velvety-black, hydrous lead copper vanadate ($H_4(Cu_5Pb)V_2O_{12}$) found as a thin crystalline incrustation. [< Mottram, in Cheshire, England.]

mot'ty, met'i, a. [Scot.] Abounding in motes.

mo-tu'ca, mo-tū'ca, n. [BRAZ.] A pestiferous tabanid fly (Hydrias lepidotus) of the Amazon valley.

mou', mū, n. [Scot.] The mouth.

mouch, mouch, vi. [Slang.] 1. To loiter about; sneak around; skulk. 2. To lead a tramping or wandering life, often earning means of subsistence by peddling wild flowers, herbs, etc.—mouch'er, n.

mou-char'a-by, mū-shar'a-bi, n. [F.] Arch. 1. A projecting lattice window. 2. A machicolated balcony.

mou-chard', mū-shār', n. [F.] A French police spy.

mouche, mūsh, n. [F.] A beauty-spot. See BEAUTY.

mou"choir', mū'shwär', n. [F.] A pocket-handkerchief.

moucht, mūct, n. [Palestine.] A cichlioid fish, a bolti.

mou-ez'zin, n. Same as MUEZZIN.

mouf'lon, mūf'lon, n. [F.] A wild sheep; specifically, Ovis musimon, of the mountains of Corsica and Sardinia, with very large and curved horns. mouf'flon;.

The Mouflon (Ovis musimon). 1/16

mought, maut, imp. of MAY, v. [Dial. or Obs.] Might.

mought, n. [Dial. or Obs.] A moth.

mouil-la'tion, mūl-yā'shun, n. The utterance of the sound of a mouillé letter.

mouil'lé, mūl'yā', a. [F. Sounded in a liquid or sonant manner, as certain consonants — e. g., ll in the French word ailleurs.

mou-jik', n. Same as MUZHIK.

mould, mould'er, etc. Mold, etc.: the usual spelling in England.

mou"lin', mū'lan', n. A nearly vertical shaft in a glacier, formed by the surface-water trickling through a crevice until in some instances it is worn large enough to permit the water to fall in a cascade.

Into these cracks the water fell, scooping gradually out for itself a vertical shaft, the resonance of which raised the sound of the falling water to the dignity of thunder. These shafts constitute the so-called moulins of the glacier. TYNDALL Hours of Exercise ch. 17, p. 181. [A. '71.]

[F., mill, < LL. molina; see MILL¹, n.]

mou'lin-age, mū'lin-ęj, n. The operation of twisting and doubling silk preparatory to dyeing. [F., < mouliner, mill silk, < moulin; see MOULIN.]

mou-line', { mū-lin', W. (mū'lin, Wr.), mū'li-net, n.

mou'li-net, { 1. Mil. The circular swing of a saber. 2. The drum of a winch, capstan, etc. 3. A form of turnstile. 4. A windlass mechanism formerly used for bending an arbalest. [< F. moulinet, dim. of moulin, mill, < LL. molina; see MILL¹, n.] moul'le-ton, mūl'ę-ten, n. A kind of dress-goods woven with a satin armure.

mouls, n. Same as MOOLS.

moult, moult'ing, etc. Molt, etc.: the usual spelling in England.

moult, mōlt, a. [Rare.] Much; many.

moun, maun, vi. [Scot. & North. Eng.] To be able; may; must. mowe+; mow'en+.

mound, maund, v. 1. t. 1. To fortify, shelter, or protect by a mound. 2. To possess a mound; form into a mound; as, mounded heaps.

The road circles softly between bits of rocky bank and mounded pastures. RUSKIN Mod. Paint. vol. iii, pt. iv, p. 140. [W. & S. '59.]

II. i. To become covered with mounds.

Wedging, by billets of wood between her sides and the mounding ice, was equally ineffectual. KANE U. S. Grinnell Expedition ch. 44, p. 405. [C. & P. '57.]

mound¹, n. 1. An artificial heap or pile of earth, for use as a burial-place, rampart, monument, etc., or sometimes the heaping up of rubbish or waste material of any kind, as shell-mounds. 2. A similar heap of natural formation, but so shaped as to convey the idea of artificial construction. 3. Civ. Engin. A pillar of earth left in a cut to show depth of excavation. 4†. Curb; restraint; also, might; size. 5†. A helmet. [< AS. mund, hand, protection.]

—Indian mounds, mounds of earth or stone, or both, found in many parts of the world, and especially in that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river. They are of various forms, and apparently have been used for several purposes, as burial-places, fortifications, dwellings, and places for the observance of religious rites. The race that built these mounds has not been definitely traced, the opinions of ethnologists and archeologists differing, some holding the builders to have been an aboriginal race of whom no other trace has been found, and others ascribing the works to the ancestors of the existing red Indians.—mound'-bird", n. A megapodioid fowl of Australia and some Pacific islands, with very large feet, and whose females lay disproportionately large eggs in mounds raised by themselves, to be hatched by the heat generated by decaying vegetation; a megapode, as a brush-turkey. m.-maker‡; m.-turkey‡.—m.-builder, n. 1. One of the race that built the so-called Indian mounds.

That appears to me the most reasonable suggestion which assumes that the Mound-Builders came originally from Mexico and Central America. BALDWIN Ancient America ch. 3, p. 70. [H. '72.]

2. A mound-bird.

mound², n. Her. A jeweled ball or globe, often surmounted by a cross, forming part of the regalia of a king or emperor. It is of Roman origin and is an emblem of sovereignty. Called also orb. [< F. monde (< L. mundus), world.]

moun-seer', maun-sir', n. Monsieur: a corruption.

mount, maunt, v. 1. t. 1. To ascend and seat oneself upon; as, to mount a horse; also, to ascend, in the sense of elevating oneself or assuming sovereign power.

Elizabeth mounted the Throne amid an extravagance of approbation. E. LODGE Portraits vol. iii, p. 5. [H. G. B. '50.]

2. To ascend by climbing; as, to mount a hill, flight of stairs, or ladder. 3. To prepare for use, exhibition, ornament, preservation, or examination; as, to mount a drawing or a map; to mount microscopic subjects or a stuffed animal. 4. To equip and prepare for representation on a stage, as a play, by furnishing all needed machinery, scenes, costumes, etc. 5. To prepare for use by placing in position and assembling and adjusting parts; as, to mount a cannon. 6. To carry or be equipped with; as, a ship or fort mounting thirty-two guns.

Women had to mount the tricolor and men to wear long hair, moustaches, a red cap, and wooden shoes. MIVART Essays and Criticisms vol. i, ch. 1, p. 22. [O. & CO. '92.]

7. To equip or furnish with a horse or horses for riding; as, he is well mounted; he mounted the regiment at his own expense. 8. To set on horseback or assist to the saddle; as, he mounted the child before him. 9. To lift or elevate; exalt; as, to mount one's thoughts.

II. i. 1. To rise on high; ascend; soar: with or without up; as, to mount on mighty pinions; mounting flames. 2. To get on horseback. 3. To amount: often with up; as, his debts mounted up to thousands of dollars.

Her learning mounts to read a song,
But half the words pronouncing wrong.
SWIFT The Furniture of a Woman's Mind l. 9.

[< F. monter, < LL. monto, < L. mon(t-)s, mountain.]

—to mount a breach, to attack or enter a breach in a fortification.—to m. a loom, to arrange the warps in the heddles of a loom.

—mount'a-ble, a. That may be mounted.

mount¹, n. 1. An elevation of the earth's surface, rising prominently above the adjacent country. The term is applied somewhat loosely, especially in poetical use, to low hillocks or to lofty mountains. When used as part of a proper name it always precedes the specific appellation; as, Mount Washington.

And the Lord said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mount Abarim, and see the land which I have given unto the children of Israel. Num. xxvii, 12.

2. Palmistry. One of seven fleshy protuberances in the palm of the hand. 3. Her. A green hillock in the base of a shield. 4. Fort. A raised work commanding the surrounding country. 5†. A mound. [< AS. munt, < L. mon(t-)s, mountain.]

mount², n. 1. That upon or by which anything is prepared or equipped for use, exhibition, ornament, preservation, or examination, as the card or the like upon which a drawing is mounted, the parts and appliances by which a gun is attached to its carriage, the glass slide and its adjuncts upon which a microscopic subject is secured for examination, or the ornamental work of metal or other substance by which a piece of furniture or the like is embellished or strengthened. 2. A saddle-horse or other animal used for riding; as, a good mount is essential in the hunting-field; by extension, a bicycle.

But when pressed into a pace of five or six miles an hour, which is his natural gait, a good, high-bred dromedary is as comfortable a mount as can be desired. R. E. COLSTON in Century Magazine Mar., '85, p. 653.

3. A step or other aid in mounting a horse; a horse-block; also, the assistance given by a groom to a woman in mounting. 4. A signal for mounting.

See AMBLE, CANTER, GALLOP, PACE, TROT, WALK, and the plate of MOVEMENTS OF THE HORSE, on preceding page. See illus. under DOG.

The anatomy and physiology of locomotion, and of the hand, the vocal apparatus, and the like, had long been studied and often figured, but it remained for instantaneous photography, in the hands of Eadweard Muybridge and others, to reveal a series of unexpected and almost incredible attitudes in the action of the horse and other animals. The Japanese artists, as if with different organs of vision from ours, had long since caught the remarkable attitudes of animals in motion, especially of birds, and their subtle vision has been verified by photography. The results are important in their scientific aspect, but if adopted too literally in art (which should give ideal appearance rather than scientific literalism) the effect may be painfully ludicrous.

3. A series of actions or incidents tending toward some end; as, the antislavery movement; the temperance movement.

Bot.* Producing or having many capsules. — mul"ti-car'i-nate, a. Having many ridges, as certain shells. — mul"ti-cau'line, a. Having many stems. — mul"ti-ca'vous, W. (mul-tic'a-vous, C.), a. Having many cavities. — mul"ti-cel'lu-lar, a. Many-celled. — mul"ti-cen'tral, a. Having many centers; as, multicentral development. — mul'ti-charge, n. Having several charges fired in quick succession, each increasing the velocity of the projectile; as, a multicharge gun. — mul"ti-cip'i-tal, a. Many-headed: said of plants with many stems from the same root. — mul'ti-col"or, mul'ti-col"our, a. Having many colors; party-colored. mul"ti-col'ored‡; mul"ti-col'or-ous‡. — mul"ti-cos'tate, a. Having many ribs or costæ, as leaves, shells, etc. — mul"ti-cus'pid. I. a. Multicuspidate. II. n. A multicuspidate tooth. — mul"ti-cus'pi-date, a. Having more than two cusps or points; as, multicuspidate teeth. — mul'ti-cy"cle, n. A velocipede having four or more wheels; specifically, such a velocipede built for military use, driven by several men, and carrying light artillery, military equipments, etc. — mul"ti-cyl'in-der, a. Having several cylinders: said of steam-engines, etc. — mul"ti-den'tate, a. Having many teeth or tooth-like processes. — mul"ti-den-tic'u-late, a. Having many fine teeth or tooth-like processes. — mul"ti-dig'i-tate, a. Having many digits or finger-like processes. — mul"ti-di-men'sion-al, a. Having more than three dimensions. — mul'ti-faced", a. Many-faced, as some crystals. — mul-tif'er-ous, a. [Rare.] Bearing much or many; prolific. — mul"ti-fe-ta'tion, n. Obstet. Pregnancy with more than two fetuses. mul"ti-fe-ta'tion‡. — mul'ti-fid, a. Cut into many lobes or segments. mul-tif'i-dous‡. — mul-tif'i-dus, n. Anat. A series of separate digitate fasciculi forming a portion of the deeper muscular layer of the back. — mul"ti-flag'el-late, a. Having many flagella. — mul"ti-flo'rous, a. Many-flowered. — mul'ti-flue, a. Having many flues. — mul'ti-foil. I. a. Having seven or more radiating divisions or foliations, or having seven or more spaces between cusps. II. n. Any multifoil decoration. — mul'ti-foiled, a. — mul'ti-fold, a. Many times doubled; manifold. — mul"ti-gan'gli-on-ate, a. Having many ganglia. — mul"ti-gen'er-ate, a. Generated in many ways; as, a multigenerate function in mathematics. — mul"ti-gen'er-ous, a. Having many kinds: consisting of many kinds. — mul"ti-glob'u-lus, n. -LI, pl.] Helminth. An aggregation of zoœcia on an internode of a polyzoan. — mul"ti-gran'u-late, a. Containing or having many grains. — mul"ti-gy'rate, a. Having many gyri or convolutions. — mul"ti-ju'gate, a. Bot. Having many pairs of leaflets. mul"ti-ju'gous‡ (XIII). — mul"ti-lam'i-nate, a. Many-layered. — mul"ti-lat'er-al, a. Having many sides. — mul"ti-lin'e-al, a. Many-lined. mul"ti-lin'e-ar‡. — mul"ti-lo'bate, a. Many-lobed. mul"ti-lo'bar‡; mul'ti-lobed‡. — mul"ti-lob'u-lar, a. Having many lobules. — mul"ti-loc'u-lar, a. Many-celled. mul"ti-loc'u-late‡. — mul-til'o-quence, n. Loquaciousness. mul-til'o-quy‡. — mul-til'o-quent, a. Talkative; loquacious. mul-til'o-quous‡. — mul"ti-mam'mes, n. Teras. The condition of having supernumerary breasts; polymastia. — mul"ti-no'dal, a. Having many knots or nodes. mul"ti-no'date‡; mul"ti-no'dous‡. — mul"ti-no'mi-al, a. Same as POLYNOMIAL. — mul"ti-nom'i-nal, a. Having many names. mul"ti-nom'i-nous‡. — mul"ti-nu'cle-ate, a. Having several nuclei, as cells. mul"ti-nu'cle-ar‡; mul"ti-nu'cle-a"ted‡. — mul"ti-nu'cle-o-late, a. Having many nucleoli. mul"ti-nu'cle-o-la"ted‡. — mul"ti-o'vu-late, a. Bot. Having many ovules. — mul-tip'a-ra, n. Obstet. A woman who has borne more than one child, or who is parturient the second time. — mul"ti-par'i-ty, n. The production of two or more at a birth. — mul-tip'a-rous, a. 1. Giving birth to many at one time. 2. Bot. Many-bearing: said of a cyme with several branches. — mul"ti-par'tite (XIII), a. Divided into many parts; having several parts. — mul'ti-ped. I. a. Having many feet. II. n. A many-footed animal. mul'ti-pede‡. — mul'ti-phase, a. Elec. Having components of various phase: said of rotating currents or the system employing them. See ROTATE. — mul"ti-pin'nate, a. Bot. Many times pinnate. — mul"ti-pli'cious‡, a. Multiplex. — mul"ti-pli'cious-ly‡, adv. — mul-tip'o-tent, a. [Rare.] Having power to do many things and much. — mul"ti-pres'ence, n. The being present, or power to be present, in a number of places at the same time. — mul"ti-pres'ent, a. — mul"ti-ra'di-ate, a. Having many rays. — mul"ti-rad'i-cate, a. Having many roots. — mul"ti-ram'i-fied, a. Much ramified or branched. — mul"ti-ra'mose, C. (-ra-mose', W.), a. Having many branches. mul"ti-ra'mous‡. — mul"ti-sac'cate, a. Having many sacs. — mul-tis'cient, a. Having much or varied knowledge. mul-tis'cious‡. — mul"ti-sect, a. Having many segments. — mul"ti-sep'tate, a. Having many partitions. — mul"ti-se'ri-al, a. Having many series or rows. mul"ti-se'ri-ate‡. — mul"ti-sil'i-quous, a. Bot. Having or bearing many pods. — mul-tis'o-nous, a. Emitting much sound or many sounds. — mul"ti-spi'ral, a. Having many spiral coils, as the opercula of univalve shells. See illus. under OPERCULUM. — mul"ti-stam'i-nate, a. Bot. Having many stamens. — mul"ti-stri'ate, a. Much streaked or striated. — mul"ti-sul'cate, a. Much furrowed or sulcate. — mul"ti-syl-lab'ic, a. Having many syllables. — mul"ti-syl'la-ble, n. A polysyllable, especially one of more than three syllables. — mul"ti-ten-tac'u-late, a. Having many tentacles. — mul"ti-tit'u-lar, a. Distinguished by many titles. — mul"ti-tu-ber'cu-late, a. Having many tubercles, as teeth. mul"ti-tu-ber'cu-la"ted‡. — mul"ti-tu'bu-lar, a. Abounding in tubes; as, a multitubular boiler. — mul-tiv'a-gant‡, mul-tiv'a-gous‡, a. Given to wandering or traveling. — mul'ti-valve. I. a. Having many valves, as the chitons and barnacles. II. n. A shell with many valves, as a chiton. — mul"ti-val'vu-lar, a. Multivalve. — mul"ti-ver'sant, a. Given to transformation; readily assuming an altered form; protean. — mul-tiv'i-ous, a. [Rare.] Having a multiplicity of ways or roads. — mul"ti-vol'tine, a. Having two or more broods a year: said of some silkworms. — mul-tiv'o-rous, a. Ravenous; gluttonous.

mul"ti-fa'ri-ous, mul"ti-fē'ri-us, a. 1. Having great diversity or variety; multiplex.

A multifarious reading may please, but does not feed the mind.
SMILES Duty ch. 2, p. 46. [H.]

2. Law. Characterized by multiplicity and diversity: said of a bill in equity in which unconnected matters are joined. 3. Bot. & Zool. Many-ranked; arranged in several vertical rows or ranks. [< LL. multifarius, < L. multus, many, + (perhaps) fors, speak.] mul"ti-fa"ri‡.

Synonyms: see MANY.

mul'ti-form, mul'ti-fôrm, a. Having many forms, shapes, or appearances.

The spirit of the age is in nothing more manifest than in the multiform attempts . . . to balance the interests of these two hitherto conflicting elements [body and mind].
CHARLES ELAM Physician's Problems ch. 4, p. 205. [L. & S. '89.]

mul'ti-form, n. [Rare.] A figure of many different aspects or appearances.

— mul"ti-form'i-ty, n. — mul"ti-form'ous, a.

mul"ti-gen'er-ate, etc. See MULTI-.

mul"ti-mil'lion-aire', mul'ti-mil'yun-ār', n. [Recent.] One worth many millions. [< MULTI- + MILLIONAIRE.]

— law of multiple proportions (Chem.), the law that when the same amount of one substance combines with more than one amount (by weight) of a second, all the quantities of the second so combining are multiples of the smallest. — m. circuit, a compound electric circuit in which each of several separate sources, as cells, or receptive apparatus, as lamps, has one pole or electrode connected to a single positive conductor that communicates with them all, and the other to a single negative conductor. m. arc‡. — m. pointing (Scots Law), a judicial proceeding corresponding to the bill of interpleader for compelling rival claimants to contest their respective rights to the same fund. — m. pregnancy, a state of pregnancy with more than one fetus. — m. wheel, a mechanical movement consisting of a large wheel with diametrical slots in the sides of its face or arms, and a smaller wheel, having rollers engaging in the slots: a variety of the trammel-wheel. The small wheel rotates twice as fast as the large one, and either may be used as a driver.

A Multiple Wheel.

mul'ti-ple, n. Math. A resultant of multiplying a quantity by whole numbers; as, 14, 21, 28, and 35 are multiples of 7: opposed to divisor. — common multiple, a multiple of each of two or more numbers; as, 100 is a common multiple of 2, 5, and 4. — least common m., the smallest number which contains each of two or more separate numbers without remainder; as, 20 is the least common multiple of 2, 5, and 4.

mul'ti-plex, mul'ti-plex, vt. [Colloq.] To cause to be manifold.

mul'ti-plex, a. 1. Made up of many parts; manifold; multiple.

General laws are necessarily multiplex, and are not the causes but the results of a vast number of arrangements.
MCCOSH Divine Government bk. ii, ch. i, p. 83. [C. & BROS. '83.]

2. Same as MULTIPLICATE, 2. [L., < multus, many, + plico, fold.]

mul'ti-plex, n. Math. A set of objects. [C.]

mul'ti-pli"a-bl(e, mul'ti-plai'a-bl, a. That may be multiplied; capable of multiplication. mul'ti-pli-ca-bl(e‡. — mul'ti-pli"a-bl(e-ness, n.

mul'ti-pli-cand", mul'ti-pli-cand', n. Math. A number multiplied or to be multiplied by another. [< L. multiplicandus, gerundive of multiplico; see MULTIPLY.]

mul'ti-pli-cate, mul'ti-pli-kēt, -tip'li-ket or -kēt (XIII), a. 1. Consisting of many or more than one. 2. Bot. Folded in many plaits: said of the petals of some flowers in estivation. [< L. multiplicatus, pp. of multiplico; see MULTIPLY.]

— multiplicating glass, a convex lens having many facets and producing many images of an object.

mul"ti-pli-ca'tion, mul'ti-pli-kē'shun, n. 1. The act or process of multiplying or increasing, or the state of being multiplied or increased in number.

The unnecessary multiplication of articles of faith gives a character of littleness to Christianity.
R. HALL Works, Address, Jan. 19, '14 in vol. i, p. 172. [H. '49.]

2. Math. (1) Arith. The process of finding the sum of a number called the multiplicand repeated as many times as there are units in another number called the multiplier, or, in case the multiplier is fractional, of finding the same fractional part of the multiplicand as the multiplier is of unity. (2) By extension, in higher mathematics, the performance of any operation by one quantity a upon another quantity b such that, if either a or b is increased or diminished in any ratio, the result ab will be changed in the same ratio. 3. Bot. Augmentation; an increased number of organs, either by the addition of whole circles or by the increase in the parts of any circle. 4†. The supposed alchemic art of increasing gold and silver. [F., < L. multiplication-), < multiplicatus; see MULTIPLICATE.] — multiplication table or tables, a tabular arrangement giving the products of pairs of numbers, generally those from 1 to 12.

mul'ti-pli-ca"tive, mul'ti-pli-kē'tiv, a. Tending to multiply; used in multiplication; indicating multiplication. — mul'ti-pli-ca"tiv(e-ly, adv.

mul'ti-pli-ca"tor, n. Math. Same as MULTIPLIER, 2.

mul"ti-pli'cious‡, etc. See MULTI-.

mul"ti-plic'i-ty, mul'ti-plis'i-ti, n. 1. The condition of being manifold or very various, also of being very numerous; hence, a large number; as, a multiplicity of arguments.

More people in fact fail from a multiplicity of talents and pretensions than from an absolute poverty of resources.
HAZLITT Works, Table Talk in second series, vol. i, p. 101. [L.]

2. Law. The splitting up of a cause of action, so as to multiply subjects of litigation. [< LL. multiplicitat(i)-s, < L. multiplex; see MULTIPLEX.] — multiplicity of actions (Law), several suits brought all depending upon the same issue and capable of being consolidated for trial.

mul'ti-pli"er, mul'ti-plai'ėr, n. 1. One who or that which multiplies or increases in quantity, or causes something else to multiply or increase. 2. Math. The multiplying number. 3. Elec. A flat conducting coil of wire for increasing the effect of an electric current on a needle. 4. A calculating-machine for multiplying. 5. A multiplying reel, as on a fishing-rod. 6†. An alchemist. — indeterminate multiplier (Alg.), a multiplier whose value is left indeterminate till the conclusion or application of the problem. — thermo-electric m., a combination of a thermopile and a galvanometer to detect and measure minute differences of temperature.

mul'ti-ply, mul'ti-plai, v. [-PLIED; -PLY'ING.] I. t. 1. Math. To perform the operation of multiplication upon. See MULTIPLICATION, 2. 2. To make more numerous or various; increase in quantity or add to.

He who traffics in curses multiplies curses, and he who deals in blessings multiplies blessings.
R. L. COLLIER Every-Day Subjects ch. 7, p. 135. [A. U. S. '72.]

3†. To add, by alchemical contrivance, to the bulk or value of (gold or other precious metals).

II. i. 1. To become greater in number, degree, or extent; especially, to become numerous by propagation.

The number of people, in all civilized countries, living in plenty and comfort, has multiplied a hundredfold.
GOLDWIN SMITH False Hopes p. 26. [L. CO. '89.]

2. Math. To be engaged in or to undertake the exercise of multiplication. 3†. To add to gold or other precious metals by alchemical processes. [< F. multiplier, < L. multiplico, < multiplex; see MULTIPLEX.] — mul'ti-ply-ing-gear"ing, n. An arrangement of gear-wheels in which large gears act upon smaller, increasing the speed at the expense of the power. — multiplying-glass, n. An arrangement of small mirrors for the purpose of multiplying reflections. — multiplying-lens, n. A lens having several facets, and showing several images of one object: used in taking tintypes and other small photographic pictures. — multiplying-machine, n. Same as MULTIPLIER, 4. — multiplying-wheel, n. A wheel for driving another (usually smaller) at a higher rate of speed than its own, as in multiplying-gearing.

mul"ti-po'lar, mul'ti-pō'lər, a. Having more than two poles: specifically said of nerve-cells having several processes, and of electrical apparatus. See illus. under GANGLION-CELL. [< MULTI- + POLAR.]

mul"ti-po'lar, n. Elec. A machine having several magnetic poles, occasionally known as a multiple pole.

mul"ti-spi'ral, etc. See MULTI-.

mul'ti-tude, mul'ti-tūd, n. 1. The state or character of being many or numerous; great number; as, his crimes became heinous by reason of their multitude.

FARRAR in Sunday Magazine [London] Sept., '91, p. 595.

Synonyms: see ARMY; ASSEMBLY; HOST.

— the multitude, the general body of persons, as opposed to the privileged few; the public.

mul"ti-tu'di-nous, mul'ti-tūd'di-nus, a. 1. Consisting of a great number; having a vast variety of parts or members; manifold.

While the long Atlantic billows to my feet came rolling on With the multitudinous music of a thousand ages gone.
E. C. STEDMAN Flood-Tide st. 1.

2†. Belonging or relating to a multitude. [< L. multitudo; see MULTITUDE.] mul"ti-tu'di-na-ry‡.

Synonyms: see MANY.

mul'ti-va"lent, mul'ti-vē'lent, A., or mul-tiv'a-lent, C.W., a. Chem. 1. Having a valence greater than unity. 2. Having two or more valences. [< MULTI- + L. valen(t-)s, ppr. of valeo, be strong.] pol'y-va"lent or po-lyv'a-lent‡.

— mul'ti-va"lence or mul-tiv'a-lence, n. The state of being multivalent.

mul'ti-valve, etc. See MULTI-.

mul-tiv'o-cal, mul-tiv'o-cal, a. Denoting many different things; having various meanings; as, an ambiguous multivocal word.

mul-tiv'o-cal, n. A word that has more than one signification.

They include (1) polysemants, where a primary and a derivative have the same form, as burst, present and past tenses, or post, noun and verb; (2) homographs, identical to the eye, as lead, to guide, and lead, a metal; and (3) homophones, identical to the ear, as altar and alter. FITZEDWARD HALL Modern English ch. 6, p. 170. [S. '73.]

[< MULTI- + VOCAL.] — mul-tiv'o-cal-ness, n.

Mul-to'ca, mul-tō'ca, n. The Turkish code of law, consisting of precepts from the Koran, traditional injunctions of Mohammed, and decisions of early califs. B. Dict. [< Turk. multeka, < Ar. multaka, place of meeting.]

mul-toc'u-lar, mul-tec'yu-lər, a. Having two or more eyes; having eyes divisible, like those of a fly, into facets. [< MULT- + OCULAR.]

mul'tum, mul'tum, n. A mixture containing the extracts of quassia and licorice, used as an adulterant in beer-brewing. [L., neut. s. of multus, much.]

Mummy and Mummy-cases.

1. The sarcophagus or coffin. 2. The outer mummy-case. 3. The inner case, with cover lifted, exhibiting the mummy in its wrappings. Compare illus. under IBIS.

The ancient Egyptians practised several methods of mummification. They removed the brains and intestines, filled the abdominal cavity with myrrh, cassia, and antiseptics, and steeped the body 70 days in natron. It was next wound in many folds of gummed cloth (asphalt and wax being used) and placed in an ornamented mummy-case. The intestines were separately buried in asphalt and sand, in Canopic vases. (See CANOPIC.) The bodies of the poor were simply steeped in natron 70 days. The Peruvians produced natural mummies by burial in dry saline soil; the Canary-Islanders, by the use of salt and an absorbent vegetable powder. In Sicily and Bordeaux corpses are naturally mummified in dry underground chambers. The mummies made at Memphis are black and dry, breaking readily when handled, but those of the best Theban epoch are yellowish, flexible, and so elastic that the flesh yields to the touch of the finger and the limbs may be bent without breaking.

> Chambers's Encyc. vol. iv, p. 313. [L. '92.]
